Bond Market Improving

Improvement in the bond market continues to be reflected in a decline of average yields as compiled by a national investment house.

The 40-bond list of McLeod, Young, Weir and Co. Ltd. covering November shows an average yield of 7.94 per cent compared with 8.05 per cent at Oct. 29 and 9.03 per cent at Nov. 30 a year ago.

In the interim, bond interest rates also have declined with interest rates generally.

The largest decline in the recent period was .2 per cent from 7.97 to 7.77 per cent in the municipal bond sector, followed by .09 per cent for public utilities to 8.23 per cent, and .07 per cent to 7.63 per cent for provincial bonds.

Computime Sues Ames

VANCOUVER (CP) — The trustee of bankrupt Computime Canada Ltd. is suing the brokerage house of E. A. Ames and Co. Ltd. for damages over the non-issue of $1 million of convertible sinking fund debentures.

George Donaldson, Computime's trustee in bankruptcy, filed the writ in B.C. Supreme Court Nov. 23.

Computime declared bankrupty in June, 1970, and a month later, A. S. Gill, the company's chairman, blamed the brokerage house for the bankruptcy.

Gill said First National City Overseas Investment Corp. of New York had agreed to buy $500,000 of an issue of $1 million 8 per cent convertible sinking fund debentures issued by Computime — provided the remaining $500,000 was subscribed for by other investors.

Gill said A. E. Ames had undertaken to secure orders for the debentures from Computime shareholders.

In the writ, the trustee claims damages suffered by Computime because A. E. Ames had said the orders were secured when they were not. It also seeks damages under a contract under which A. E. Ames agreed to buy any debentures not taken up by shareholders.

The writ claims that as a result of the debentures not being subscribed for, Computime suffered losses and heavy expenses to the extent that it could no longer meet its obligations as they fell due.

The writ also claims damages as the result of Computime being deprived of the $500,000 which First National was to have provided.

Computime went bankrupt with liabilities of $1.78 million.

Two-Front India War Erupts

GALLANT CONVOY of sanding trucks stand at the ready, lest the deadly dusting of snow on the Malahat cuts the vital artery to the rest of Vancouver Island. Meanwhile, on the slopes of Green Mountain, a more respectable 36 inches welcomed skiers on the first day of the season. Winter's freezing fingers will be luring temperatures down to 27 degrees in Victoria tonight.

Debate Ends Dec. 8, Tax Bill by Christmas

OTTAWA (CP) — The government guillotine dropped Thursday, assuring passage of its massive tax bill by Christmas but leaving Parliament in an uncertain mood.

The House voted 121 to 80 in favor of a motion to close committee-of-the-whole discussion next Wednesday, which would mark 44 days of scrutiny, 32 in item-by-item committee debate.

A similar time limit may be placed on third-reading debate and Commons passage of the 707-page overhaul of the tax laws may come as early as Dec. 13.

Then, while the Senate deals with the bill, the Commons will debate a further tax bill to implement income-tax cuts introduced Oct. 14 by Finance Minister E. J. Benson.

Parliament could be in session Christmas Eve, even with the time limitations, to pass the bills that are designed to come into effect Jan. 1.

MANY OFF TAX ROLLS

The new laws will mean that hundreds of thousands of low wage earners no longer will pay income tax, those in slightly higher brackets will pay less, the rich will face a capital gains tax for the first time, and businesses and corporations will face a blizzard of new tax rules.

House veteran Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre) predicted "chaos, furore and ill will" would result from the government move.

SPEAKER CRACKS DOWN

By day's end, the prophecy was being fulfilled. Speaker Lucien Lamoureux, after a testy question period, threatened at one point to adjourn the House if order wasn't observed.

Outside the House, Mr. Knowles said:

"It's a strange way to back into the Christmas spirit, isn't it? By the time this is done, this Parliament won't have the authority it ought to have."

Mr. Stanfield, referring to renewed election rumors, said the cabinet knew that "the rosy bloom of this government has faded . . . they have felt the tide of popular support run out on them."

TRUDEAU SILENT

Prime Minister Trudeau sat through it but did not speak, except to flick remarks across the green carpet that separates government and opposition. He grinned as former prime minister John Diefenbaker taunted im.

The 76-year-old Mr. Diefenbaker compared Mr. Trudeau to Machiavelli, the medieval Italian political adviser "known for his craftiness."

The 121-to-80 vote found New Democrats Max Saltsman (Waterloo) and Andrew Brewin (Toronto Greenwood) voting with 119 Liberals, Opposed were 56 Conservatives, 14 New Democrats and 10 Social Credit members.

ISRAEL BEATS ARABS TO PUNCH

UNITED NATIONS — Israeli officials, in a diplomatic offensive coinciding with opening of General Assembly debate on the Middle East, called today for Arab-Israeli negotiations instead of war to end the current crisis.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad was the lead-off speaker in this afternoon's debate, and Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban will reply on Monday.

But even before the session began, Israeli acting Prime Minister Yigal Allon told a luncheon in Jerusalem he was hopeful Egypt would change its position and agree to more indirect negotiations with Israel in hopes of finding a peaceful settlement.

Sewer Rebuilding On Cook Approved

A decision by the provincial government today could mean there will be no sewage treatment plant built in the Clover Point area.

Following a meeting with resources minister Ray Williston today, Mayor Courtney Haddock announced the province has agreed to a city request to rebuild the Cook Street sewer main between May and Dallas.

WAY CLEARED

This means the way is cleared for the regional government to find a solution to sewage disposal that normally flows through the controversial Clover Point outfall.

The city has been barred from making improvements to its sewage system in that area by Health Minister Ralph Loffmark who has insisted any changes must be accompanied by construction of a treatment plant.

Such a treatment plant in the Clover point residential area has been something city hall has tried to fight off but without success.

Two possibilities for a solution are now dominant. One would be to reroute the area's sewage through a new pipe from Clover Point back to Macaulay Point outfall. The other is to build a treatment plant on Trial Island.

A third possibility is elimination of the need for a treatment plant by use of an extended outfall from the Clover Point area.

Haddock said the approval given today will let the city go ahead with much-needed repair of a main that at present causes sewage pollution along the Dallas Road beach. The pollution occurs when the old main becomes overloaded and sewage overflows into the storm drain system which empties along the beach.

$600,000 COST

The work may begin within a few months and will cost about $600,000 to the city.

The decision was met with enthusiasm from city engineer James Garnett who said repair of the old main is a very important step.

In his announcement, Haddock said Williston "fully concurred" with the city's request.

GIVE, SAID BANDIT . . . AND SO HE DID

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — A gunman accosted 60-year-old Cliff Brady Thursday while he was working in a service station and told him, "Give it to me."

Brady did. He said he belted the gunman in the mouth, knocking him to the ground. When the assailant got up, Brady said, he knocked him down again. Crawling to his feet again, the gunman fled.

Police said all that was lost was a little skin from Brady's knuckles.

Paris Police Foil Hijack

PARIS (AP) — For six hours today a hijacker held for ransom a Pakistani airliner at Orly airfield, with a threat to blow it up and kill the passengers unless he received 20 tons of medicine for Pakistan refugees.

At nightfall police rushed the jetliner and seized the man in a burst of gunfire.

The police charge came while quantities of drugs were being loaded aboard the Pakistan International Airlines 720-B.

A police official said the hijacker was overcome by an officer who entered the aircraft wearing a Red Cross arm band.

The hijacker was officially identified as Jean Kay. Officials said he fired once while he was being overcome, and "received a couple of blows" as he scuffled with other policemen who entered the aircraft through a trap door. A police officer was slightly wounded by a gunshot in the hand.

U.S. Dollar Lower As Run Continues

LONDON (UPI)—The U.S. dollar spiralled downward on European money markets today, hitting postwar lows for the second straight day in Frankfurt, Zurich, Amsterdam and Brussels.

In Paris, the French government clamped stringent controls on foreign speculators after a 10-day wave of dollar selling that forced massive intervention by the Bank of France in an effort to underpin exchange rates.

Only in London did the U.S. currency show signs of recovery from Thursday's batterings, sparked by rumors of U.S. dollar revaluation at this week's meeting in Rome of the world's 10 richest non-communist nations.

Frankfurt dealers traded the American dollar at an exchange rate of 3.2825 German marks, a de facto devaluation of 11.5 per cent from the old parity of 4 marks to the dollar.

De facto devaluation reached 9 per cent in Amsterdam, where the dollar brought only 3.3020 Dutch guilders today, and 8.54 per cent in Brussels, where the rate fell to 45.73 Belgian francs to the dollar.

New Bid Planned For Gas

Pacific Northern Gas Ltd. of Vancouver, a subsidiary of Westcoast Transmission Company, Thursday announced it will go before the Public Utilities Commission to bid for the right to supply natural gas to Vancouver Island.

R. M. Rutherford, PNG president, said the decision was prompted by Premier Bennett's statement earlier this week that the PUC could hear applications from any British Columbia company.

The PUC earlier had invited only Malaspina Gas Pipelines Ltd. to submit an application. Westcoast is not permitted to submit an application because it is federally incorporated and under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board.

Westcoast owns all the voting shares of PNG and with Phillips Petroleums of the United States, a majority of class A shares.

PNG DIRECTOR

Kelly Gibson, Westcoast chairman and chief executive officer, is a director of PNG.

Mines Minister Frank Richter said today, "We don't care if anybody applies; that's up to the PUC."

He also said the initial terms of reference for applications set down by Bennett last spring "didn't preclude anyone from putting forth another scheme."

He said Westcoast's ownership in PNG is not a problem because PNG is a B.C. incorporated company. Richter denied the government has abandoned its guidelines by allowing PNG's application.

CONSIDER THEM

He indicated the government would consider a proposal not meeting the original guidelines.

"If they were reasonable and the PUC were prepared to recommend, the government would look at them," Richter said.

This does not mean the government is committing itself to follow the PUC recommendations, Richter said. PUC chairman Dr. J. F. K. English has been advised by the mines minister to hear applications from companies other than Mamaspina.

Gibson said today in Vancouver he doesn't think Westcoast's ownership in PNG will hurt its chances before the commission.

He based his opinion on Bennett's statement and the fact that PNG is provincially incorporated.

NO DATE SET

English has not set a date for hearings on applications other than to say they will not be held until next year.

Rutherford said PNG's decision was reached only Thursday, so he could not release full details.

In general terms, PNG's plan is to extend Westcoast's pipeline from Williams Lake to Tidewater at Powell River. The new line would be 234 miles long. Gas would be sold at Powell River to the other pipeline applicants on a "cost-of-service basis," Rutherford said.

Pakistani Jets Bomb Airports

Times News Services

The India-Pakistan conflict spread to two fronts today with Pakistani planes bombing three Indian airports and an apparent all-out offensive by Indian troops into West Pakistan.

India immediately declared a national emergency but denied the charge, made by Radio Pakistan, that its troops had entered that country. The broadcast, it said, was an attempt to cover up the Pakistani air raids which included one on Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir.

An Indian government spokesman, briefing reporters as New Delhi was thrown into darkness by an unexpected air raid warning, said Pakistani aircraft attacked Amritsar in the western Punjab and Pathankot, also in the Punjab, as well as Srinagar.

The defence ministry spokesman said that the airports appeared to be the main targets of the attacks.

Pakistan radio, reporting on charges of Indian attacks against West Pakistan, said the situation remained confused.

It was the first major action reported on the West Pakistan northern Indian front. The fighting had previously been concentrated on East Pakistan's border with India.

FIGHT ON SEVEN FRONTS

Radio Pakistan reported that India had sent three more divisions in the biggest Indian offensive so far against Pakistan and fierce fighting was reported on seven fronts around the borders of East Pakistan.

In New Delhi, President V. V. Giri issued the emergency proclamation on behalf of the Indian government because of the unprovoked aggression by Pakistan."

The president, the constitutional head of state, at the same time summoned both houses of parliament into a special session Saturday to approve the "Defence of India Bill," emergency legislation that would give the government wide police powers.

New Delhi airport was closed to international traffic until further notice. Internal flights have been diverted to airports other than New Delhi.

Radio Pakistan said the air strikes were made "as a counter-measure to meet the challenge" of Indian attacks that began before dawn from India's Rajasthan Desert and southwestern Kashmir.

The Associated Press reported from New Delhi there appeared little doubt that India and Pakistan were again at "all-out war"—for the third time since they became independent in August, 1947, after the partition of British India into predominantly Hindu and Moslem states.

In the air attacks, India also reported that four Pakistani Sabre jets heading for Agartala in Tripura state this afternoon were intercepted and three damaged.

The spokesman described raids by the Pakistani air force on the airfields of Amritsar, Srinagar and Pathankot as "a blatant attack."

PM RETURNS TO CAPITAL

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was informed of the attacks and was flying back to New Delhi from Calcutta. She had flown to Calcutta only a few hours earlier to begin a tour of the border with East Pakistan.

Mrs. Gandhi told a public meeting in Calcutta that India did not want war with any country but if war was thrust on her she would fight it with all her strength.

Mrs. Gandhi called on the Indian people to be ready for any sacrifice.

Only One Hurdle Left for Oil Pipeline

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Interior Secretary Rogers Morton said Thursday that interior department approval of the controversial trans-Alaska oil pipeline should be given by the end of January, but said later he did not mean he definitely would approve the project.

During a Seattle radio broadcast, Morton said an environmental impact statement required by a federal court before the department can take any action on the pipeline should be finished about Jan. 15.

★ ★ ★

"As to the issuance of the permit it looks as though it will follow very closely behind," he added. "I will consult with the president, I will consult with chairman Russell Train of the council on environmental quality and, perhaps, some other officials of government, but we should be ready to issue a permit certainly before the end of January."

Reached later by phone in Portland, Ore., Morton said he had been quoted correctly, but that he had not meant the permit definitely would be issued.

Lawyers for Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., the firm which wants to build the line, have asked for an additional 30 days to work on legal documents they need to defend their proposals against suits brought by conservation and Alaskan native groups, Morton said during the Seattle broadcast.

Oil from the pipeline would come past Victoria in tankers on the way to the refinery near Bellingham.

The environment groups have said in public hearings that the proposed pipeline and the oil tankers threaten severe environmental damage through disruption of land and the danger of oil spills.

They have urged the interior department to consider an alternative route entirely over land through Canada which would avoid Alaska's earthquake belt and the need for tankers.

★ ★ ★

"I think we have done everything within our power to consider a Canadian alternative," Morton said Thursday.

"For one thing, there has been no application for a Canadian route. There has been no overt action on the part of the Canadian government nor on the part of an oil company consortium in Canada.

"The only application we have before us is the trans-Alaska route."

$310 Limit 'Dictatorial'

The vice-president of the B.C. Rest Home Association charged today the government is being "dictatorial" by limiting municipal liability for payments to welfare patients in private hospitals and rest homes.

John Hanrahan said in Victoria the association will meet with the government in an attempt to get an explanation of why the liability limits have been set.

If the answer is that the province cannot afford more payments, he said, the association will plead it case it Ottawa.

LIMIT SET

A cabinet order released Thursday set a limit of $310 a month for payments to private hospitals and a $200 monthly limit on payments to rest homes.

The order means that municipalities are not liable to pay costs exceeding these amounts if the institutions submit higher bills.

The move presents problems to rest home and private hospital operators who say the fixed rates are insufficient to cover operating costs. Several court suits have been launched in attempts to force municipalities to pay bills exceeding the fixed rates.

Hanrahan said the move is "dictatorial and unfair" because the government knows these institutions cannot give adequate care for $310 or $200 a month.

He said care in private hospitals cost $25 a day and the approximate $5 a day care cost for rest homes also is not enough.

People in rest homes requiring greater care really ought to be in private hospitals, Hanrahan said.

"So we're certainly going to fight this. We're not going to sit down and let this go by."

Chile Riots Blamed On Allende Foes

SANTIAGO, Chile (UPI) — President Salvador Allende has blamed his political opponents for disturbances in which 96 persons were arrested and 73 injured. The Santiago area was under a state of emergency.

Allende said the incidents were provoked by women from the opposition Christian Democrat and National parties who marched through the downtown area accompanied by "80 to 100 armed youths, ready to attack."

The Socialist president said the demonstrators were from "the stalest sections of the bourgeois, who later burned tires in the streets, interrupting traffic and assaulting homes and individuals."

The women were protesting a scarcity of consumer goods and university violence. They said they were attacked by the revolutionary left movement, the Communist Ramona Parra brigade and the Socialist Elmo Catalan brigade. Each is a paramilitary organization.

Allende told a farewell rally Thursday night for Cuban Premier Fidel Castro that the protest would make no change in his emmort to convert Chile into a Socialist nation. "I will not take a single step backwards," he said.

Scott Would Change Business Taxes

Victoria mayoralty candidate Bill Scott called today for civic control over business taxes and licence fees to take some of the burden from taxpaying homeowners.

Scott told a press conference that while the homeowners' share of the tax load had risen 27 per cent, business taxes had climbed only five per cent in the same priod.

DORMANT

The candidate said he wanted to "right a grave wrong perpetrated on homeowners, small businessmen and the low income group through an out-of-date B.C. Municipal Act which has lain dormant since it was enacted."

The lack of city control over crucial areas of revenue has "stultified and frustrated the attempts by progressive brains at city hall to solve the city's financial problems ... including the millions of dollars needed for sewers, hospitals and education."

To date, 85 per cent of these costs have been borne by people in the $4,000 to $5,000 income group.

Scott said that in calling for more civic autonomy he was taking a page from the book of Premier Bennett, whom he called a financial wizard.

"Regardless of whether I'm elected I hope the incoming mayor will give me the privilege and the authority to pursue with the provincial government reforms in the Municipal Act."

Scott proposed that the city be empowered to levy a tax of 0.5 per cent based on the gross revenues of all businesses operating in Victoria.

He pointed out that on this basis the three stores operated by the Liquor Control Board in the city would pay $58,583 into the city coffers. B.C. Hydro would pay another $45,000.

DOCTORS TOO

He also proposed that licensed doctors pay $140 fees instead of the current $100, and an additional flat fee of $500 for use of hospitals, laboratories and other subsidized facilities. This would mean the city's 250 physicians would be paying an additional $135,000 in city fees.

Scott, a pawnbroker and retired lighthouse builder, is opposing Mayor Courtney Haddock, lawyer Foster Isherwood and Ald. Peter Pollen in the Dec. 11 civic election.

. . . INDIA, PAKISTAN

The Indian spokesman who announced the Pakistani air attacks said there had been no declaration of war by Pakistan.

"This is a case of a blatant attack on India. Yahya Khan seems to have kept his 10 days' promise" — a reference to a statement by the Pakistani president last week that he might be off to a war in 10 days' time.

FOUR PLANES ATTACKED

Reuter correspondent S. P. Sahni reported from Srinagar that the all-clear had been sounded after one hour. He saw anti-aircraft guns firing at the four planes attacking the airport.

The Pakistani attacks announced by the spokesman came in three strategic areas which were prominent in the 1965 war between India and Pakistan. It has always been assumed that if all-out war broke out between the two countries, the major thrust would come on the border between India and West Pakistan.

Amritsar, one of the three airfields hit, is a major communications centre in the Punjab and of great strategic as well as psychological importance to India.

Although there was no actual declaration of war by either side most observers in the Indian capital felt that the Pakistani air attack in the west now almost certainly will be followed by all-out fighting between the two sides.

Military experts say that India has 14 divisions lined up on the western front against 11 or 12 divisions on the Pakistan side.

The total strength of the Indian armed forces is about 980,000 compared with Pakistan's 392,000, figures in New Delhi show.

The town of Pathankot is rated of considerable importance by military experts in Delhi. The town is a major road junction and the railhead from which India would reinforce and support its forces in Kashmir.

The Indian town of Jammu and Jullundur, in the western sector, were also blacked out following air raid alerts tonight. Chandigarh, joint capital of Punjab and Haryana states, also was plunged into darkness tonight.

In the ground fighting in East Pakistan, the Pakistani military command said Pakistan had inflicted heavy casualties on Indian forces.

BAR FOREIGN VISITORS

Focus in the fighting, which has concentrated mainly on the eastern sector, was switched to the West Tuesday when the Pakistan government closed northern areas of West Pakistan to foreign visitors.

Not So Safe

Canadian Safe Driving Week began Wednesday and six accidents and three injuries were recorded in Greater Victoria.

On the national scene, 10 deaths occurred Thursday.

The weekly national total of fatalities to date is 16.

Algeria. He managed to hold more than 200 policemen at bay while the medicine that he demanded in the name of Bangla Desh, the East Pakistan independence movement, was gathered and transported to the airport.

For much of the day, police worked under the assumption that more than one hijacker was involved, but this apparently was wrong.

Throughout the dramatic six hours, the passenger said, Kay was courteous and never threatened the people aboard.

"The hijacker authorized the stewardesses to serve meals, moved a young girl down the end of the aircraft and then let the girl and elderly passenger disembark," he added.

After about five hours, two men wearing Red Cross arm bands began unloading the medicine from a truck. As they did, seven passengers, six adults and an infant, left the aircraft.

The plane had arrived here from London on its way to Pakistan.

Institute Problems Reduced

The problems which have delayed opening of a children's psychiatric unit at the Eric Martin Institute for almost two years were reduced but not eliminated at a top level meeting Thursday.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark and David Lawson, chairman of the Royal Jubilee Hospital board, discussed differences for three-quarters of an hour in what a spokesman described as an "amiable and frank" meeting.

The issues were not resolved but are a few steps nearer to it," he said.

The delay centres around clinical direction of the 20-bed unit, which would be the first on Vancouver Island and only the second in the province.

Hospital and doctors want a clinical director to organize and oversee the ward's program. Loffmark has said the government can afford to pay for a clinical director or fee-for-service to doctors who admit patients but not both.

Library Gets Film

More than 40 16-millimetre films have been added to the Greater Victoria Public Library's audio-visual section this year.

Film topics include travel, science, anthropology, sociology, abortion, drugs, age and retirement, water conservation, the Eskimo, experimental films and Canadian content films. All are available to the public on 24-hour loan.

There is also a new collection of 35-millimetre slides on world beauty spots.

Calgary Police Sign Contract

CALGARY (CP) — City policemen voted 80 per cent in favor Wednesday of a two-year contract which gives them an 18.1-per-cent wage increase.

Effective Jan. 1, policemen will receive a 9.4 per cent raise followed by an 8.7 per cent boost effective Jan. 1, 1973.

A first-class constable who made $9,084 a year under the old contract will receive $10,988 a year in 1972 and $11,952 in 1973.

5 Policemen Face Charges

VANCOUVER (CP) — Assault charges are expected to be laid shortly against three city policemen, the police commission said Thursday night.

It recommended that civilians lay charges against two other constables as a result of the Aug. 7 riot in the Gastown district.

A statement from the commission said the names of the men would be made public when summonses were issued, expected within a week.

City prosecutor Stewart McMorran said Thursday there was sufficient evidence to proceed with charges of common assault against five officers.

The commission statement also urged Police Chief John Fisk to discipline the five men as soon as possible. The riot involved about 100 police and several thousand demonstrators and onlookers at a "marijuana smoke-in."

Tom Nuttall found it but Ed Harris got the credit. That's why we call this handsome fellow, Harris' Sparrow. (Harold Hosford photo.)

Nuttall Missed Making Mark

Almost Unknown In World

Among the band of itinerant naturalists that roamed the North American wilderness in the middle of the last century collecting and classifying wildlife was Thomas Nuttall. Despite the mark he made in his natural history work Nuttall is almost unknown outside of scientific circles.

But for an obscure woodpecker in California which bears his name, and a few scattered references to him in the scientific names of some wildlife, Nuttall would be completely forgotten.

But it could well have been otherwise.

In the scramble to organize and name the seemingly endless numbers of new species being discovered in the 1830's, two other explorers of his time, Lewis and Clark.

That Nuttall was slow in getting his into print may explain in part why his name doesn't appear more often. For example in 1834 one of his discoveries was a black-faced sparrow he shot near Independence, Missouri. Having duly described this bird, and prepared it as a scientific specimen, he then forgot it.

WILDLIFE

Harris Decided To Go Hunting

The bird was new to science but Nuttall had other things on his mind, among them a trip to the then almost-unknown Hawaiian Islands. Nine years were to pass before the rays of scientific light were to shine again on the black-faced sparrow.

So let's jump ahead 9 years, to 1843, to another great naturalist of the day and a man whose name has become almost a household word because of his magnificent paintings, John James Audubon.

Audubon, like Nuttall, was a born wanderer. His first love was painting wildlife and to do this he had to shoot the specimens he worked from. But Audubon was more than an artist, he was a scientist in the truest sense of the word. No specimen he ever shot was wasted. All were carefully described, classified and recorded. Unlike Nuttall, Audubon was quick to get his findings into print.

Long-Sought Nesting Area Discovered

The spring of 1843 found Audubon on the lower Missouri heading upstream on a trek that was to take him to the headwaters of the Yellowstone. Among his travelling companions was one Edward Harris. To this little-known gentleman farmer of Moorestown, N.J., fell the privilege of rediscovering Nuttall's black-faced sparrow.

On May 4, while Audubon's party was held up by boat trouble below Blacksnake Hills — the present site of St. Joseph, Miss., Harris decided to do a little hunting. Among the odds and ends of his bag that day were 3 finches which Audubon subsequently figured to be new to science and which he named, in honour of his good friend, and the presumed discoverer, Harris' Sparrow.

Had the cards fallen another way, we might today be calling this striking bird Nuttall's Sparrow.

But once having allowed itself to be "discovered," Harris' Sparrow was not about to give up all its secrets. Nearly a century was to pass before it would lead scientists to its nesting grounds.

As the nineteenth century drew to a close, and more and more naturalists found their way into the interior of North America, it became apparent that Harris' Sparrow was a common winter bird from Iowa to Colorado and from Kansas to Utah. But come spring it disappeared into the northern Canadian boreal forests without a clue as to its whereabouts.

Some Found At Esquimalt Lagoon

By 1929 even this remote part of the continent was opening up to the developer. A railway was being completed from The Pas in Manitoba to Churchill on Hudson Bay. The terminus of this railway proved to be the long-sought summer home of Harris' Sparrow.

Today we know that Harris' Sparrow chooses that narrow band of stunted spruce and jackpine which marks the transition from forest to tundra and which stretches from Northern Manitoba to the Mackenzie River delta, for its summer home.

Harris' Sparrows are no strangers to British Columbia. A few of them winter in the extreme southern part of the province every year but west of the Coast mountains and on Vancouver Island, they're a rare bird indeed. In recent years, though, possibly due to the increased numbers of people watching birds, it has become apparent that Harris' Sparrows get to Victoria more often than previously thought.

Ron Satterfield and Rob Mackenzie-Grieve came up with some support for this idea recently when they turned up one of these handsome sparrows on the west side of Esquimalt Lagoon while out on one of the Victoria Natural History Society's frequent safaris to this well-known birding spot.

If you go in search of this bird, don't expect the striking, black-faced plumage shown in the accompanying photograph. In fall most of the black is obscured in buff-colored feather-ends which, by spring, will have worn away to reveal the immaculate nuptial plumage.

Look for a sparrow — towhee size — with a long tail, frequently carried "cocked" like a wren. You'll probably find it skulking about among the brambles, and keeping pretty quiet. If you do happen to hear an emphatic "spink" coming from one of the tangles, you'll have found your Harris' Sparrow.

Now all you have to do is get him out where you can see him — which may not be as easy as it sounds.

Time of New Priorities

It now appears that the main benefits to be derived from the recent action of the United States in imposing restrictions and demanding revaluation of many foreign currencies will be much more far-reaching than the expected U.S. domestic effects.

The American action opened up the whole question of international exchange, the relevance of gold as a currency base and the interaction of world currencies. The result of the ensuing conferences at Rome and—shortly—in Washington may be a new basis for world trade which will be a great improvement over the often unstable system which has been in effect in recent years.

One outstanding fact arising from the talks of the Big Ten non-Communist trading nations is that the United States sees the need to recede from its earlier unilateral position, and now apparently recognizes the desirability of devaluing its currency. Certainly the other countries—colleagues, allies and customers of the United States—are firm in requiring the U.S. to take at least partial action. Washington's previous position that everyone was out of step but the U.S. has proved to be untenable in the face of strong opposition from Japan, West Germany and other countries.

The likelihood, therefore, is that Prime Minister Trudeau's visit to President Nixon next month will be on a much better basis than if he had gone some weeks ago at the urging of Opposition Leader Stanfield. At that time the chances of success through concessions by the United States were nil. Now, against the background of recent developments at the European talks, there is a better prospect of productive discussion.

Canada, of course, must be prepared to bargain. There are aspects of the auto pact and Canadian restrictions on duty-free imports by returning tourists, for instance, which the United States would like to modify. These points may well be negotiable. But there are larger, more basic areas in which Canada should adopt a firm stand. Any thought, for instance, that Canada will open the gates for large exports of energy resources or water should be rejected. We cannot afford to buy off Washington's import restrictions in such essential coin, although the pressure may be heavy.

What Canadians should be doing — and we do not have to visit Washington for this purpose—is reviewing the laissez faire approach which has led us into concentrating such a large proportion of our foreign trade in the United States market. This salient fact of Canadian economic life, coupled with the heavy preponderance of United States investment in Canada with consequent ownership and control of our natural resources and manufacturing plants, has put us in a position of dangerous dependence.

A very slight change in U.S. trade policy can face us with the threat of lost markets and thousands of jobs. We should diversify, diversify, diversify. We should push trade with all the world, and obtain our outside financial aid through borrowing capital rather than selling ownership. Otherwise there is not much of a future ahead for Canada as a sovereign nation.

A New Proposal for Thetis Lake

Thetis Park Nature Sanctuary Association, under an authorization from the City of Victoria, has for 15 years provided guidance, developed and maintained nature trails, regularly collected garbage and published a 33-page brochure on the 400 acres that constitute within "The Park" the first nature sanctuary in Canada.

But the larger concern of the Association has been to protect the "Park," which is actually not a legally constituted park, but a watershed. Under present legislation, there is nothing to prevent present or future City Councils from subdividing all or part of this priceless heritage.

In fact, one of the aldermen has suggested sale for subdivision of more than 40 acres; an earlier alderman promoted the idea of selling the lake-front for summer homes. We have seen, in spite of increasing resistance by the public, alienation of more than 300 of the original 1,400 acres. Two Hydro rights-of-way, a highway allowance, a logging concession and a pistol range have all claimed or converted land to other use.

On this evidence the Assocation and the general public it represents, do not subscribe to periodic official assurances "that no one would dare carve up Thetis Park."

Association members have come to believe that the land will be inviolate only when it has been dedicated as a properly gazetted Park by its owner, the City of Victoria, and transferred to the Capital Regional District, the logical repository for all area parkland. Thetis Park would then take its rightful place as the natural gem of the fine areas such as Witty's Lagoon, Elk and Beaver Lakes that have been secured by The Regional District for the use and enjoyment of generations yet unborn.

This is the Association's long range objective, but it also realizes that politics is the art of the possible, and that dedication may not be feasible at this time.

The Association observes that there is a feeling by the present Mayor and certain other members of Council, that Victoria has already been too generous in its donation of parkland assets. The Association agrees that the City of Victoria should not bear alone either the maintenance costs of the "Park" or the provision of facilities. Obviously the "Park" is enjoyed by a large majority who are not city taxpayers.

In the knowledge that the Regional District is unable to buy the land at the moment, the Association proposes what appears to be a fair compromise plan.

Section 467 of the British Columbia Municipal Act provides that "The council of a city, town, district or village municipality may, by by-law, reserve for a particular municipal or other public purpose, any land owned by the municipality." We have secured the most informed opinion of legal authority on the interpretation of this section, and its application to the City's ownership of the "Park": imposing a "reservation" on the land would not remove it from the City's books as an asset (as would dedication).

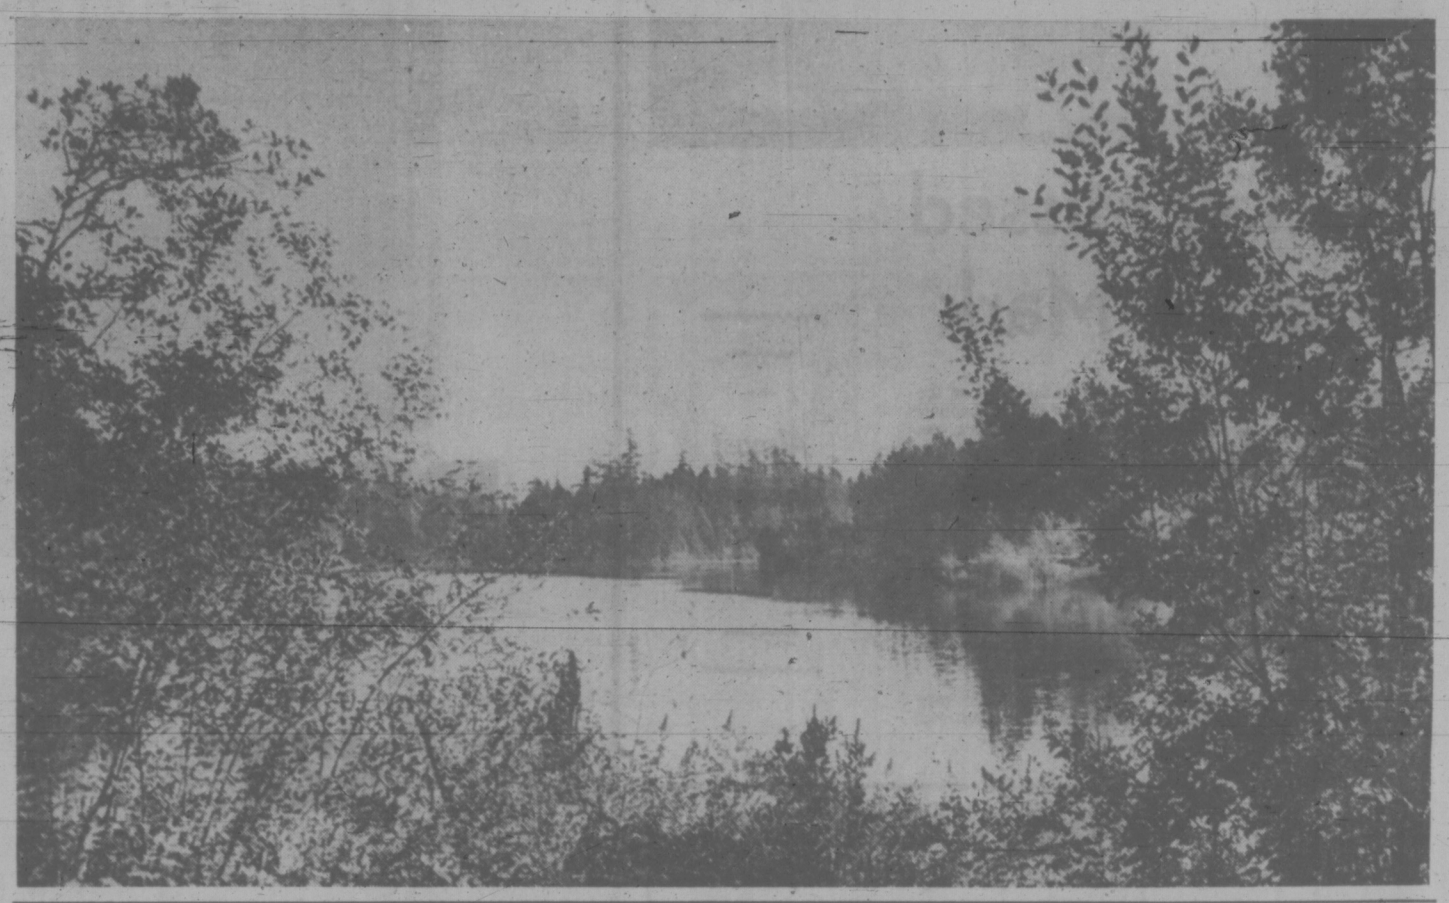
This Association considers, however, that this "action" would protect the area from encroachment until such time as an arrangement for compensation, dedication and transference can be worked out between the City and the Regional District.

Accordingly, the 754 members of Thetis Park Nature Sanctuary Association ask candidates for, or incumbents of, electoral office in the City of Victoria:

1. Do you favor eventual transfer of Thetis "Park" in its entirety to the Capital Regional District as parkland dedicated in perpetuity to the public use?

2. Do you favor the imposition of a reservation on all the land within Thetis "Park" under the provisions of Section 467 of the Municipal Act of British Columbia (1971), as an interim measure to keep the land free from encroachment?

— H. R. Matthews, President, Thetis Park Nature Sanctuary Association.



The Ecology Backlash

One of the useful, in fact essential, social developments of recent years has been the growth of human concern for the environment. The literate public has learned that mankind is poisoning the word in which he lives at a rate which threatens survival within a limited time. Without corrective action humanity could be on a suicide course.

The development of social recognition of this problem, however, has been accompanied by a form of hysteria which has created an "ecology backlash," according to informed sources in the United States. Many pronouncements have been made which are now challenged on scientific bases. The current controversy over the long-term adverse effects of DDT is a case in point. Over-enthusiastic and under-researched information has created a scepticism which can cause untold harm. Former "facts" are now undergoing re-examination and, in some cases, proving false.

The fight for a clean earth, clean water and clean air must go on, but it will not be helped by hysteria. The "backlash" is under way. Its potential destructiveness should be readily understood. But it cannot be checked by emotionalism which carries assertion beyond proven limits.

A Better Attitude—or Else

PARIS — President Nixon's year-end consultations with West European leaders are of critical importance. A way out of the current monetary crisis and an escape from serious depressing threats depend on the decisions reached. For, at present, there is a deepening gulf between the trans-Atlantic allies and a feeling on this side of the ocean that American protectionism menaces the economic future.

Particular importance is attached to Secretary Connally's inclusion in Nixon's party when it meets on the first stage of these talks with French President Pompidou. A widespread suspicion exists abroad that Connally, in his fight to save the dollar and close the trade gap, has taken recourse to a highly nationalistic line. Because of the immense size of the U.S. economy, this approach might wreck the mutual prosperity achieved in the NATO area during the past quarter of a century.

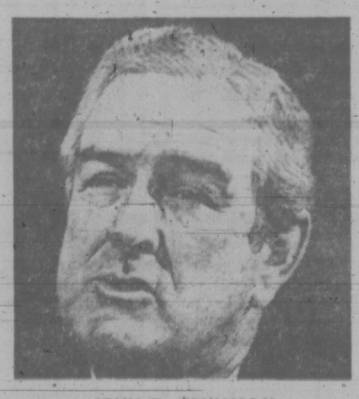
Connally will hear as much this week at the Rome financial meeting and again in the Azores. It will be made clear that unless Washington shows a more considerate attitude toward Europe, the United States risks touching off a series of reactions that could do grave harm to Western economic and political unity.

Washington has never fully appreciated the sensitivity of its position produced by the enormous U.S. investment in Europe, especially the Common Market area. Since General de Gaulle's apogee in France there has been frequent complaint on this score and a fear that Europe might become an American economic colony.

If the United States gets too tough in insisting that the monetary crisis can be unscrambled only on its terms, such an attitude might well provoke a wave of nationalization of U.S. companies. Should that ever begin, it would make nationalization programs in South America look like peanuts.

The book value last year of U.S. manufacturing and petroleum affiliates in France alone came to $12 billions, employing 238,000 workers. This is just one slice of a pie representing all Western Europe.

Many people, for emotional reasons or resentment or because of stimulus from the far left, might be happy to see a big chunk of this industrial apparatus taken over and nationalized. Obviously any such pell-mell rush would be senseless to the point of suicide for Western civilization. Nevertheless, it is necessary that Connally understand the degree of irritation here with the policies of which he has made himself the flamboyant symbol.



JOHN B. CONNALLY

It was wise for Nixon to initiate his consultations by meeting first with Pompidou. Not only is the latter a chief of state, unlike Heath and Brandt, but the toughest bargaining is likely to come at the meeting with the French. Moreover, both Nixon and Henry Kissinger are by inclination rather Francophile and on good terms with this country's leadership.

This is appreciated and every effort was made by the Elysee to accord with Nixon's desire to avoid any kind of official visit to France by sticking to neutral territory. Guadeloupe, Martinique and even French Guiana were discussed before the Azores solution was proposed.

This sets a pattern for the Heath and Brandt talks. Although the whole schedule was wrapped up at the same time, the French priority was emphasized by delaying announcement of the subsequent meetings. Moreover — the kind of point much noticed in France — Pompidou has to travel less and Nixon more to get to the Azores — as compared with Heath in Bermuda and Brandt in Florida.

There are, of course, other things to be discussed in this series of conferences: the Nixon trips to Peking and Moscow; the Middle East; India-Pakistan, and the tricky road to mutual and balanced force reductions between NATO and the Warsaw Pact, a prospect on which Nixon will find Pompidou very bearish.

Urgent Topic

But the most urgent topic is money and trade. The British and Germans are already in a bad phase of pessimism and unemployment and France, which has a better balanced economic heritage, is getting there fast. If the United States doesn't recognize their problems — and if the U.S. doesn't move soon to readjust dollar values and termipate the 10 per cent import tax on foreign goods—Americans may find themselves drifting into a commercial war with their best friends.

That, in turn, would inspire dangerous and perhaps lunatic reactions against the U.S. position in Europe and could not help but rip NATO apart at the seams, exposing Western civilization to wholly needless menaces. For all these reasons the Nixon visits with allied leaders are every bit as important — if not, indeed, more so — as his scheduled consultation with adversaries of the United States.

Blacktop on Emily's Lawn?

GARY CLARKSON

For a city which gave a belated acclaim to the universal genius of a native artist, Emily Carr, there is today disturbingly little activity to publicize her birthplace at 207 Government St.

Readers of "The Book of Small" will recall Emily's description of the house: "Then (father) built what was considered in 1863 a big fine house. It was all made of California redwood. The chimneys were of California brick and the mantelpieces of black marble. Every material used in the building of Father's house was the very best, because he never bought anything cheap or shoddy."

The garden of the then large estate is lovingly portrayed in the same book: "Father wanted his place to look exactly like England. He planted cowslips and primroses and hawthorn hedges and all the Englishy flowers. He had stiles and meadows and took away all the wild Canadian-hess and made it meek and English as he could." The shell of the house has been preserved; what is left of the garden is in an unkempt state.

Tasteful Setting

The lack of personal artifacts from the Carr period to grace the house was recently commented upon by Prof. Jackman of the University of Victoria. At a Canadian Club luncheon he further pointed out the danger of permitting preserved buildings to degenerate into dead museums. Still, good period furnishings could provide a tasteful setting which would be reminiscent of the original decor.

While the ultimate aim for Victoria might be to make suitable showpieces of Miss Carr's other homes it would be sensible to conceptrate on the remarkably charming mid-Victorian house which was the cradle of the famous woman's artistic temperament.

The work of the Jaycees in buying the house in 1967 and (in concert with the National Historic Sites Branch of the Dept. of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) renovating the many rooms, was commendable. In the last few years the Jaycees and the Emily Carr Foundation have contributed over $57,000 towards its purchase and restoration. A further contract with the federal government is now being re-negotiated.

self-portrait

Now it is time to ask what the aim of the Foundation is. Apparently it is to turn the home into a tourist attraction and shrine. But in the words of the Foundation's director, Mr. Andy Blaney, "the last 50 yards" are proving extremely difficult. Among other reasons, the future of the house is at stake because of the refusal of the Board of Variance to set aside an original ruling (based on a submission approved by the Jaycees) which would require black-top parking space in the front yard. The Jaycees think the original plan would detract from the aesthetic worth of the place. Instead, a circular walkway has been transformed into a parking place.

The original plan for parking space should be proceeded with: separated by shrubbery the blacktop should detract little from the house's attractiveness. At least until the Foundation is in a position to buy adjacent property and so provide other parking space, the plan approved by the Board of Variance should be followed. Other matters such as fire exits must be provided before the house can be opened to the public but there is no obstacle which cannot be overcome by prompt, appropriate action and a public campaign.

Once these matters have been solved and a date fixed for the house's opening there should be no delay in seeking public participation in a search for suitable household objects. People should be eager to make the home a Victorian gem. Interior decorators would have a field day.

But there is the problem of the garden which Miss Carr remembers as being so English and so tidy. It is so no longer. Here the blame can be laid at the door of the Parks Department. It had originally agreed to keep the garden up but, when the budget was cut, the Carr garden felt the effect of the economy drive.

Here, too, a community-wide appeal might result in Emily Carr fans devoting their time to putting the garden right. In fact, a lady from Ontario who recently offered to help clean up the garden, was politely discouraged by the Jaycees. There must be others who would spare their energy to make good on the city's promises and the Jaycees' waning enthusiasm.

But aside from giving the exterior of the house and the interior decorating proper support; what can be done to identify the house with Emily? There may of course be other Carr works in town which diffident owners have not revealed but here the problem of insurance in an ancient structure would be insurmountable. In place of originals, display of high quality reproductions would do a great deal to show off Emily's gifts. There could be an outlet at the House selling prints, books and cards and thereby defraying the cost of upkeep, city taxes and other expenses. Carr devotees may note that the donations to the Emily Carr Foundation are tax deductible.

High Esteem

But there is no time to be lost. The Emily Carr Foundation has already totally restored 11 rooms and there are three more to be done. With publicity, public support and good management there is no insuperable obstacle to opening the house by next summer. Victorians should not underestimate — either through misconception or apathy — the esteem in which Emily Carr is held in the rest of the country. And in spite of Emily's remarks in "Growing Pains" that "my home life was always a thing entirely apart from my art life," the two can be successfully melded.

Above all, Emily Carr should be regarded as a woman who, as she said, had "the passionate desire to express some attribute of Canada." It is that desire which a grateful country would be willing to honor in the city and home of her birth.

60 Years Ago

From the Times of Dec. 3, 1911:

Apparently little the worse for their six-day isolation from the rest of the world and the fact that they were put on rations last Friday owing to the supply of provisions growing low, the passengers of the Canadian Pacific steamer Tees, Capt. Gillam, which lay at anchor in Easy Creek since Nov. 26, arrived in port this morning. The Tees in tow of the tug Nanoose reached the Outer Docks at 6 o'clock to discharge a large shipment of whale oil and considerable fire clay which she had loaded prior to her stranding.

The 'System' Has No Place For the Aged

By COLMAN McCARTHY
The Washington Post

Everyone wants to live a long life, but there is one trouble — you have to grow old to do it. For many of America's 20 million citizens who make it past 65, the trouble is hardly worth it.

Unless you are rich or have especially devoted children, chances are that old age may be a time of anguish, loneliness and sadness, worse for some than others.

Perhaps the greatest torture of being old is that one must go about it surrounded by products and services that are ever new and ever fresh.

Last year's model, last year's fashion, last year's wardrobe — this feverish custom of discarding what in many cases is only slightly old leads naturally to a throw-away mentality. Thus, easily put out of sight and out of mind are last year's people, the old.

The White House conference on aging this week will likely have much to say on the cruel ways in which old people are neglected by the government and by institutions. But this running tragedy is not so much a planned horror as it is a reflection of a deep-set attitude.

Along with racism and sexism, there is now "oldism": an intolerance of people too slow, too wrinkled and too tired for the American pace. Dr. Robert Butler, a Washington psychiatrist and one of the few in the country who practices "life-cycle therapy," believes a strong feeling exists "of not wanting to have all these ugly old people around."

Fudge of Concern

How has this happened? Since abandoning another human being is not a natural instinct, the reason may be cultural. It is regularly pointed out, to the point of fatigue, that America is obsessed with the young, a fudge of idolatrous concern that thickens with each new fad.

But saying the country is over-fascinated with a youth cult is only part of it, and even then it is inaccurate: if we care so much about kids, why must educators constantly beg for money, why are school lunch programs left unfunded, why are stores allowed to sell flammable sleepwear for children?

The deeper cultural reality that allows the old to be the nation's resident castoffs is that American values have been largely shaped by both the Calvinist mystique of achievement and the American frontier notion of self-reliant individualism.

These two creeds naturally exclude the elderly because old men and old women are seen as no longer achieving and no longer self-reliant. They are non-producers who should be stripped of their "we try harder" buttons; after that, what else can be done but stash them on a shelf?

As Dr. Butler has noted, "our society serves the productive. We view ourselves as an organism that can all too easily dispense with its parts, which are subject to facile replacement.

"Most of our national policy decisions are economic and technological rather than moral. The office of management and budget decides. There is a gross national product, however important, that is closely watched but there is no human value index."

Honored by Some

If putting away old people — removing them from budget priorities, from family circles — fits in well with the American way, it is also true that this wasn't always the case or style with all Americans.

One can visit ethnic families in the northeast industrial towns — Italians, Poles, Slovaks, Greeks and others — and inevitably an old person is found to be an honored and wanted member of the family.

Unlike others, many ethnics insist on keeping the parents and grandparents in the main path of travel, if only because the young know that one day they must go that way, too. If you are kind to your parents, Irish children are told, you will have a long life.

But keeping to this tradition of respecting the old is not easy for ethnic Americans. Professor Michael Novak, soon to publish a book on ethnics ("The Rise of the Great Unwasped" from Macmillan), has written: "One of the more poignant prices ethnics had to pay to become Americanized was to learn not to care for one's parents or grandparents, to learn that life belongs most to those between the ages of 15 and 50."

Ship Them Off

"In the public schools, the ethnic child was taught to make fun of one's parents and grandparents — their accents, their gestures, their values. 'Old-fashioned' became a word used not for the respect due to wisdom but for contempt due to inferiority or being different from Wasp America. It was silly to care for one's aging parents, to put up with their complaints, customs and needs.

"'The American way' was to ship off the old folks to some sanitized rest home; but most ethnic people couldn't quite bring themselves to do that. For cattle maybe, but not for one's parents. The solution often was to find some small apartment, a separate room, in which the old folks could live in some compromised way, not quite in the centre of the family as their parents had been, but assuredly not institutionalized as 'the Americans' were."

A word and concept now in heavy use is "community." Real estate men no longer build developments, they create communities, the young go off to found communes but this talk of community is strange; how can you have a common unity when no place is given to the elders of the tribe?

"Traditionally," Nathan W. Shock, head of the National Institutes of Health Gerontology Branch, has said, "the older person in the community had a role in that he had lived longer, he therefore had more experience, he was wiser . . . he knew where the tigers were in the jungle."

The sources of this tradition are easily found, even without going to the east where the old have always been revered.

In the 6th century rule of St. Benedict, for example, one of the earliest charters for community living, the fathers and brothers of the monastery are told in chapter 37 that the old are worthy of special treatment:

"Although human nature itself inclines us to show pity and consideration to the old . . . still it is proper that the authority of the rule should provide for them. Let their weakness be always taken into account, and let the full rigor of the rule as regards food be in no wise maintained in their regard. There is to be a kind consideration for them, and permission is to be given them to anticipate the regular hours."

Even today, in the many European and American Benedictine monasteries and convents, old members of the community are cherished and honored for their wisdom.

These are rare enclaves of charity, however, and the spirit of compassion has not spread. But it persists at least. In the end, the main impact of this week's White House conference on aging must be less on American politicians or programs than on American values — the principal source of many of the elderly's sufferings.

Some of these are inevitable, the results of sickness or family scattering. But many are not; they are caused by a value system that plays down filial respect while playing up much that is passing and cheap.

Not Easy Goal

In a recent book on the elderly, French writer Simone de Beauvoir asked, "What should a society be like that in his old age a man can remain a man?" The answer: "He must always be treated like a man."

This is not an easy goal, neither for wide-open conferences nor for closed-up minds. But if it is true that every country is entitled to a few mistakes, then perhaps we are now coming around to recognizing one. America, compared with other countries, is still young — exactly the time to see that the realities of aging do not become the horrors of aging.

Too tired for the pace

Schools Make an Easy Target But What Can Replace Them?

By CHRISTOPHER PRICE
New Statesman

Ivan Illich, who has been visiting Britain for the first time, is an aristocratic Croatian Catholic priest who hates the United States of America and wants to abolish all schools.

More accurately, he is now only marginally a priest. Having suffered a full-scale Roman inquisition into his social and religious deviations in June 1968 and the virtual excommunication of his Mexican study centre six months later, he has handed in his vestments and requested his bishop that he be held to only two of his priestly obligations in future — those of reading his breviary daily and remaining for ever celibate. He is also only partly Croat — his mother is a Sephardic Jewess and he went to school in Vienna.

★ ★ ★

So far, so bad. He sounds no different from that galaxy of Central European mystics like Rudolf Steiner, who emerge from the unnatural rigor of their intense early schooling with a pretentious philosophy offering a panacea for all the world's problems.

Illich is rather different, however. His American experiences have added a whole new dimension to his European upbringing. In the ordinary course of events he might have been expected to pursue a harmless Vatican diplomatic career, but soon after ordination he opted for a Puerto Rican parish in New York; trouble has followed him ever since.

Having taught himself Spanish in a matter of weeks by standing on corners and talking to the locals, he rapidly came up against some of New York's rather indolent Irish clergy by trying to persuade them all to do the same.

Luckily, Cardinal Spellman, Irish though he was, quickly recognised him as the catalyst the church needed in its dealings with Latin America; he upped him to the rank of monsignor at the unprecedented age of 29 and packed him off to Puerto Rico to train priests at the university there. He must have known it could not last long but his loyalty was unfailing and he continued to protect Illich until his dying day.

The crisis came when Illich was expelled from the island by the local prelate — a certain Bishop McManus — for campaigning against the local Catholic party in favor of birth control.

So he went off to Cuernevaca, just south of Mexico City, and set up CIDOC, a revolutionary study centre, under the patronage of Mendex Arceo, Mexico's one and only liberal bishop.

CIDOC stands for the Centre for Intercultural Documentation; it is supposed to be a secular, free university, but is mostly a conference centre for discussions between Catholics and Marxists on revolutionary strategy. It publishes quite a lot and teaches Spanish most efficiently.

When Spellman died four years ago, the Vatican (in the shape of Cardinal Ottaviani, another Croat, but an arch-enemy of Illich) was at last able to declare CIDOC officially subversive. Since then Illich has despaired of reforming the Church of Rome and trained his guns increasingly on more worldly institutions — particularly schools and universities.

One of his greatest virtues is that he writes in English rather than American; and his latest book on the subject, Deschooling Society, has a powerful compelling style.

★ ★ ★

Graded, certificated, hierarchical school systems simply serve to raise expectation in the vast majority of the population only to crush them later. Universal school-plus-college education, popularly supposed to be available to all, would cost the U.S. far more than the Vietnam war at its height; and the countries of Latin America can hardly afford such a luxury for 1 per cent of their population.

Schooling, once it becomes synonymous with education, transforms it into a shortage commodity, and the teaching profession into a new priesthood, charged with the task of selecting and training a schooled elite.

If schools and certification were abolished, and laws instituted preventing job-discrimination on the basis of schooling, real education would flourish at a fraction of the present cost. Hum, hum, hum.

Illich's original aim was to rescue Latin America from the fate of the U.S. He first described CIDOC as a centre for de-Yankification (the Portuguese translation is even more evocative — desgringalizacao). His whole philosophy springs from the clash between his radical Catholic humanism and the American predicament.

Whether he maintains his position quite as strongly in European context remains to be seen. Probably he will. His views on the church and schooling are now paralleled by similar attitudes to all other institutions — particularly hospitals and overseas aid.

He believes — very much in the Quaker tradition — that man can only get back his individuality when he is free from priests of every kind.

Unfortunately his power and clarity in attacking institutions is only matched by the vagueness of his Delphic convolutions about what he would put in their place. This irritates most politicians beyond words, particularly Marxists, who are infuriated by his refusal to accept that economic forces are of primary importance.

He is quite unperturbed by all this; he has little time for programs and platforms and insists that changes in human attitudes come bofer everything else.

He is now so influential in the U.S. that he has almost attained the status of guru. He has collected a small group of fanatical acolytes and large crowds follow him around, hanging on his every word. This and his refusal to be specific about solutions — make him something of a mixed blessing, even to radical reformers of Western society.

★ ★ ★

Our education systems may be brutally inequitable, but they could be worse. His "deschooling" crusade is already giving comfort and support to a number of right-wing economists who are peddling half-baked versions of the Illich line in the U.S.

If they and their friends got a grip on Western society, our present state might suddenly seem like heaven on earth. He is a remarkable man, with insight into most of the ugly distortions in the modern world; but his "friends" need watching.

Up and Away With Tarzan

By RUSSELL BAKER

American Airlines is putting piano bars aboard its 747 jumbo jetliners. This gives it a momentary lead in the fierce competition among airlines to be Number One in sky fun, but the lead will not last long.

A competing airline is already flying tests with a 747 that has not only a piano bar, but also a zoo. There are still some problems to be solved with the zoo before regular scheduled flights begin. The pumas, for example, become irritable on a diet of airline food and have to be taken into the airport every other day to eat at the employees' cafeteria.

The reptiles, particularly the larger snakes, tend to wriggle free of their seat belts after the captain has put the seat-belt sign on, and consequently several have suffered bruised coils during rough landings.

On a test flight the other day, a crocodile that had escaped from the zoo turned up at the piano bar, inside the piano. Nobody would have known it was there if the piano player, who had had three martinis, had not made such a botch of "Down Among the Sheltering Palms," the crocodile's favorite song.

★ ★ ★

The crocodile's heckling cries inside the piano prompted a stewardess to lift the lid. Fortunately, U.S. sky marshals surrounded the piano immediately and seized the crocodile for questioning.

The airline industry will be watching closely to see if zoo flights succeed. Because they require a great deal of room, zoos would give the airlines an easy solution to the problem of filling up their 747's. Many airline executives, however, do not believe that Americans can be persuaded to go to the zoo any day except Sunday.

The social director of one of the nation's most amusing airlines believes that the typical air traveler wants something more sophisticated than zoos on Monday-through-Saturday flights.

For this reason he has had his airline experimenting with safari flights. On these, part of the airplane is turned into a jungle. Passengers who want more active fun than they can find at the piano bar stalk the animals.

No shooting is permitted, of course, because it would disturb passengers who are watching the movies. Instead, the hunters photograph their quarry with hand-held movie cameras.

★ ★ ★

There are many bugs to be worked out before this concept will be ready to be advertised. One day last week, for instance, there was an awkward scene aboard an experimental safari flight at 33,000 feet over Paducah.

The flight had been in the air an hour and a half, and everything seemed to be going happily. The "G" movie and the "R" movie were both under way. The nonsmokers had been successfully segregated from the smokers, who were halfway through their first pack.

Back at the piano bar, women of incredible desirability were striking photogenic bar poses with businessmen of irresistible expense accounts. The hunt had been under way in the jungle section ever since the captain had turned on the "Safari" sign.

It was, in short, an idyll aloft until, just at the moment the people at the piano bar had decided to sing a third round of "Boola Boola," a panicked elephant burst out of the safari section closely pursued by a hunter with hand-held movie camera.

A business executive at the bar, assuming that he was about to be photographed singing "Boola Boola" at a piano bar with a woman not his wife by a detective in the employ of somebody in his company who wanted to ruin him threw his drink at the hunter.

It missed and struck another drinker, a man who always became sullen and bellicose at piano bars because the piano players never knew his favorite songs. He announced that he would whip any man in the plane and threw a punch that landed on the passing elephant's kneecap.

The elephant, persuaded by the piano-bar singing that he was in the hands of Yale men who would have him stuffed for scholarly display if the plane was allowed to land at New Haven, charged through the "G" movie section, the "R" movie section, the smoking section, the non-smoking section and into the cockpit.

★ ★ ★

The pilot, surmising that the elephant would kick the piano bar to splinters unless he was delivered to Burma, agreed to the beast's demand.

The passengers, none of whom had ever been to Burma, thought it was the most exciting new concept in sky fun since macadamia nuts, but the airline's executives agree that it would be very hard to duplicate on four flights a day.

Does anybody remember, "Coffee, tea, or milk"?

Nixon Wants SALT Signing Soon

VIENNA (Reuter) — Talks between Soviet and United States representatives in this Austria capital could prove a turning point in complex negotiations towards curbing their nuclear missile race and further improving East-West understanding.

Many analysts believe that U.S. President Richard Nixon is particularly keen for a positive result from the latest Vienna meeting which would enable him to sign some form of agreement when he visits Moscow in May.

The two sides have been meeting for the last two years in Helsinki and Vienna in what has become known as SALT—strategic arms limitation talks—to find an acceptable formula to end the costly race.

The Americans hope this sixth round of talks, which opened in Vienna Nov. 15, will yield if not an actual first-stage agreement, then the recognizable outline of one that will maintain a balance of security for each country.

REPORTS PROGRESS

The chief American delegate, Gerard Smith, has said the earlier rounds have made real progress and he now is hopeful of a successful conclusion.

Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Semyonov, leading the Soviet delegation, spoke of conducting the discussions in a constructive spirit.

Major differences remain to be solved—some technical, some strategic and some political.

The two sides have still to resolve the differences between what are considered tactical nuclear weapons and what should be classified as strategic and therefore subject to any agreement.

Since the talks first opened in Helsinki in late 1969, two major outline proposals toward an agreement have been made and have yet to be reconciled.

U.S. BACKS CEILING

The first came from the Americans at a meeting in Vienna in the summer of 1970. It consisted of a broad package in which both sides would accept a ceiling on the number of missile land launchers, submarine launchers and strategic bomber launchers.

An over-all figure of 2,000 such launchers appeared to be the basis of the U.S. proposal.

Within this, each side could decide on its own mixture of offensive or defensive weapons— missiles, bombers and submarines.

The Russians are understood to have made counter proposals at Helsinki earlier this year for an initial agreement limited to defensive anti-ballistic missiles.

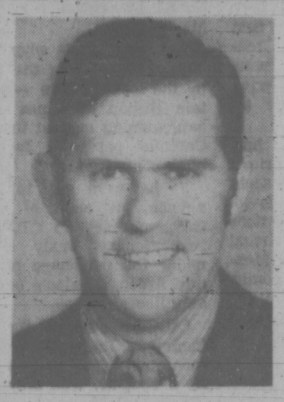
They suggested Washington and Moscow should limit their ABMs to 100 in a protective ring around each capital to ward off strikes on these cities.

The Russians had already installed a large ABM system around Moscow and felt they were ahead in this aspect of weaponry.

The Americans, just embarked on the first stage of a different form of defence, countered by suggesting 300 ABMs should be placed in three rings —each of 100— around three missile strike sites.

This was in keeping with American strategic philosophy of protecting anti-strike capacity rather than guarding a capital which might be evacuated in an emergency.

A fair assumption is that both sides have since been trying to find a way of integrating their different proposals into a mutually-acceptable package and that the sixth round of talks in Vienna is deeply concerned with this.



ROBERT ST. GEORGE ELLIS — A third generation resident of Victoria who manages a locally owned business is keenly interested in keeping Victoria a city for PEOPLE. Married with two young children, he is active in community affairs serving as a vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, Better Business Bureau, and working with the Community Chest and other organizations.

TAXES — a fair sharing of the tax burden must be developed to assist homeowners, especially those on fixed income.

PARKS — expansion, not encroachment with continued residential density, a program to environmental quality must be implemented.

PLANNING — a program involving owners and residents, aimed at preserving what is best while providing what is needed, must be developed.

POLLUTION — sewage treatment, smoke and noise abatement, and other improvements to environmental quality mus be implemented.

CONVENTION CENTRE — a combined convention and civic centre should be given top priority, paid for by those who use it.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT — duplication of services in the Greater Victoria area increases costs for the taxpayers in all areas. Many more essential services can be combined.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT — a sound economic base, built on desirable light industry, will provide income for Victoria families and help pay the tax bill.

'Caught by Surprise'

EDMONTON (CP) — Harold Cardinal, president of the Indian Association of Alberta, has asked the Commons' committee on Indian affairs for another hearing Dec. 7 to clarify how association funds are being spent.

Cardinal said that questions asked last week by the committee "caught me by surprise and I was not prepared to answer them as the books were in Alberta, not Ottawa."

He and Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien appeared before the committee last week to discuss problems of northern Alberta Indians.

Cardinal had said the minister had delayed payment of funds to the association to force an end to school boycotts on three reserves.

Chretien said the funds were withheld because the association had not provided a satisfactory accounting of how last year's money had been spent.

Chretien had said government auditors had been able to identify only $62,000 of $220,000 sent to the association for two programs as being spent on those programs.

Red Deer MP Gets Job

OTTAWA (CP) — Robert Thompson, member of Parliament for Red Deer, has been named national organization co-ordinator for the Progressive Conservative party.

Thompson, 57, former leader of the national Social Credit Party, was first elected to the House in 1962.

The announcement was made by Liam O'Brien, national director of the Conservative party.

Alberta Trial Site For B.C. Hydro Suit

PEACE RIVER, Alta. (CP) — A suit brought by the town of Peace River against the British Columbia Power and Hydro Authority will be tried in Alberta, Mr. Justice W.R. Sinclair of the Alberta Supreme Court ruled Thursday.

The town is claiming compensation for damage to its water supply system, which it says was disrupted by the Bennett Dam on the B.C. end of the Peace River.

Scientists have blamed the dam for lowering water levels on the river and for hurting the ecology of the Peace-Athabasca delta in northeastern Alberta.

The power authority had sought to have the case heard in B.C. but Mr. Justice Sinclair said the trial should be held in the province where the damage is alleged to have occurred.

No date for the trial has been set.

More Scope Needed

WINNIPEG (CP) — Pharmacists, who often know more about drugs and their effects than doctors, should become more involved in patient care services and hospital work, the president of the Canadian Society of Hospital Pharmacists said Thursday.

Jack Blackburn told delegates to the Manitoba Health Conference that pharmacists must overcome a tendency to limit themselves to counting pills and labelling bottles.

CAR HULKS on a lot just south of Edmonton are a few of 11,000 picked up in Alberta's old car cleanup. The province has awarded contracts worth $181,000 for their disposal.

For the price of a Skylark you can own a Buick.
To begin with, Skylark is priced a lot lower than you may have thought. In fact, if you can afford to buy a new car, the chances are you can afford to buy a new Skylark.
And when you compare Skylark with the other cars in its class, well, there just isn't much comparison. That's because Skylark comes equipped with Buick features.
Like Buick's semi-closed cooling system. The one that should never overheat.
Like Buick's trued tires and wheels for a Buick smooth ride.
Like Buick's inner-fender construction and a Magic-Mirror finish to keep your new Skylark looking new.
Like Buick's nickle-plated exhaust valves on the standard V8. They help promote longer valve life.
And like any Buick, Skylark gives you the thoughtful attention to detail and quality you've come to expect from a car that bears the Buick name.
All those features make Skylark a great new car to own.
And because Skylark is an intermediate-sized Buick, the price is intermediate-sized.
So Skylark is easy to own, too.

GM MARK OF EXCELLENCE

Buick on Occupant Protection.
The driver and passengers in the 1972 Buicks mentioned on this page are literally surrounded by features designed for their protection. The padded instrument panel is energy-absorbing. As is the steering column. And the front seat back tops.
There's a steel Cargo-guard between the trunk and the passenger compartment. And steel Side-Guard beams in all doors for added side impact security. Further impact security is provided in such areas as the fuel tank. Nothing has knowingly been left to chance. Some features, however, require action on your part if they are to do their jobs. Seat belts must be buckled up at all times. Same with the shoulder belts. But all the occupant protection features in your car aren't near as important as the way you drive. When driving, be careful, be defensive, be sober.

Not Enough Lucre For Laurier's Love

MONTREAL — The "intimate" letters of former prime minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the wife of his law associate failed to draw any attention at an auction Thursday night.

Bidding for Laurier's "sentimental and tender" letters to Mrs. Emilie Lavergne lasted less than 30 seconds. Bids opened with an offer of $3,500, went to $3,800, $4,000 and stopped at $4,500. "As there are no more bids this item is being withdrawn from the sale," auctioneer Walter Anop said.

LAURIER
. . . love letters

"It's grotesque that no Canadian citizen was interested in the greatest Canadian in our history to make a decent offer for the letters," said Bernard Amtmann, the antique book dealer offering the letters for sale.

Amtmann said the letter were valued at between $10,000 and $30,000 and "maybe even as high as $50,000 on the international market."

NICEVILLE, Fla. — Working with commando-like precision, six masked and armed men raided a state road prison on Thursday, overpowered two guards and escaped with a struggling pleading prisoner they said they are going to kill, state prison officials reported.

"The big man wants to see you," one of the intruders told 34-year-old prisoner Peter Bryan Walker as they marched him from a prison dormitory at gunpoint.

MELBOURNE — Sir Robert Menzies, Australia's former prime minister, suffered a stroke Thursday but is not in serious condition, his wife reported today.

"He has had vascular spasms which have left his arms and legs weak," said Dame Pattie Menzies. "All he needs is a little physiotherapy to get the movement back in the legs."

CHESTER, England — Steelworker Peter Ryan was quietly watching television one evening when the woman upstairs dropped in through the ceiling, hotly pursued by the chimney, ceiling and roof.

At a civil court in this northwest English town Thursday, Ryan was awarded $4,500 in damages and compensation against the owner of his former apartment.

Ryan's left leg was broken and he was trapped for an hour in the rubble after a chimney collapsed in high wind in January, 1968. The woman upstairs was also hurt.

"Practically all that was left standing were the four walls," the judge said.

SYDNEY, Australia — A man survived a six-day ordeal while lost on a snow-covered mountain only to die Thursday from a fall down a ravine as he was waving to a rescue helicopter.

Alan Enver, 50, had been missing with his wife Malbritt, 42, on 7,300-foot Mount Kosciusko in New South Wales.

As he was waving to the rescue helicopter, he fell 90 feet into a ravine.

NELSON — The snow was falling, the streets were like ice, so Eric Balle abandoned his truck here Thursday because he considered driving conditions too dangerous.

Several minutes later a city ambulance was whisking him to hospital. He had slipped on a patch of ice and broken his ankle.

NEW YORK — Edward Egan, the New York detective who plays in the hit film, The French Connection, based on one of his cases, was found guilty Thursday of serious misconduct and dismissed from the police force.

Egan was tried on departmental charges of not turning in narcotics and guns he seized in dozens of cases and with not appearing in court when he was scheduled to testify as a prosecution witness.

CHICAGO (UPI) — Santa Claus was behind bars Thursday night — charged with begging. He was scheduled to appear in court eight days before Christmas.

Mike Okun, 23, was arrested in Chicago's Loop Thursday after he collected more than $25, allegedly for Vietnamese war orphans.

LOS ANGELES — Paul Shayne stood before the court and defended his client fervently — quizzing the jury, cross-examining the arresting officer and delivering an appeal for acquittal.

And as the jury filed out of the courtroom Thursday to begin its deliberations in the traffic violation case, Shayne sighed: "Gee, I missed my calling; I should have been a lawyer."

"Aren't you an attorney?" asked the startled municipal court judge.

"Oh no," Shayne replied, "but it's all right for me to represent him. I'm his brother-in-law."

Judge Alfred Margolis didn't agree, declared a mistrial and sentenced Shayne, 48, to two days in jail for practising law without a licence.

NEW YORK — There was a brief silver lining to South Street Thursday when a Wells Fargo armored truck spilled 15,000 dimes. The truck swerved to avoid a cement truck.

The heavy cargo shifted, snapping the door lock, and three $500 bags spilled out, burst on the pavement and covered the street with coins.

Four guards jumped out with guns drawn and looked on while some volunteers scooped up the stray cash.

"They got them all too, except the dime I found later," said parking lot attendant Lawrence Sarnelli who helped in the cleanup.

Said one Wells Fargo employee later: "There are bill days and coin days. Thank God, this was a coin day."

Grits Are Lagging In Job Arena—PM

TORONTO (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau conceded Thursday night that his government has "fallen significantly short of the mark" in creating jobs for Canadians entering the labor force, then hit back at critics who insist the nation is "in a terrible economic slump."

The prime minister cited unemployment as one of two economic indicators in which Canada lagged behind the United States this fall "in a significant way." The other was in the field of merchandise exports.

Mr. Trudeau said in a speech to the Canadian Italian Business and Professional Men's Association of Toronto that unemployment in Canada during September averaged 6.7 per cent of the labor force, compared with 5.8 per cent in the U.S.

In merchandise exports, Canada "nevertheless did well' in experiencing a 7.7-per-cent increase from September of last year to September, 1971. He didn't quote U.S. figures.

"Canadian government economic policy has been turned to the needs of Canada and has been implemented to the extent that Canadian jurisdiction permitted," Mr. Trudeau told the business representatives of Toronto's 350,000-strong Italian-Canadian community.

SHORT IN ONE AREA

"In only one area has it fallen significantly short of the mark,—we have not been able to provide jobs to all of the large number of people entering the abor force in recent months."

Mr. Trudeau said the Canadian labor force is expanding "at a rate faster than that in any other industrialized country." Workers, particulary young persons, are entering the labor pool "in unprecedented numbers."

He had harsh words for "commentators" in the news media who seem to think that government should be run "in away that permits startling headlines" about the national economy.

And Mr. Trudeau offered a defence of his government's policies on the economy, employment and trade, backed up by a fat wad of statistics that he described as "the accepted signs of economic health."

The prime minister noted that industrial production in this country in August increased by 1.4 per cent, while it dropped by 1.2 per cent in the U.S. In September, after the Nixon administration placed its 10-per-cent supplementary duty on imports "giving to its own manufacturers immense advantages" over foreign competitors including Canada, industrial production here rose a modest .3 per cent and only .5 per cent south of the border.

"The current expansion of the economy is so strong that the rat of growth for 1971 as a whole is likely to exceed that of every other country in the Western world, and even that of Japan," Mr. Trudeau said.

BETTER ON HOUSING

Canada bettered the U.S. performance in housing starts, held the line on consumer prices and prices generally, and improved retail sales. On the other hand, the Americans have had the advantage of a labor force that is expanding at a rate less than that of Canada, as well as an unemployment rate traditionally below the Canadian average.

"These indicators are the accepted signs of economic health, the facts upon which economists base their diagnosis of the state of the economy and way it will move," Mr. Trudeau said. "They are facts which make me optimistic about the Canadian economy."

The prime minister said he is "puzzled" by the availability of these statistics to the opposition parties and "every commentator in Canada" and their reluctance to pay attention to "the current strong economic performance in this country."

"Is there a widespread desire in Canada that government shoud be run in a way that permits starting headlines?" asked Mr. Trudeau. "Is there a feeing of disappointment that Canadian governments do not choose to conduct their business and create their policies in poster-paint colors and dramatic announcements?

"I can't beieve so. There is no reluctance on the part of the federal government to make sweeping changes where those are believed necessary. Neither, however, is there any inclination to substitute drama for well-considered policy."

Library Vote Urged For C. Saanich

A provision to give Central Saanich a vote on the Greater Victoria Library Board cleared committee level at city hall Thursday.

The movie is one of several changes agreed to that will update the agreement among five municipalities.

The measure also requires approval from Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Saanich. The next step in the city is full council approval.

Mayor Courtney Haddock voted against including Central Saanich because he said a vote would give that municipality too much voting power in relation to financial responsibility, which amounts to less than 3 per cent of the budget.

"If we were deadlocked they could swing the vote, couldn't they?" said Haddock.

Ald. Peter Pollen, a member of the library board, voted in favor of the change. He said there is enough goodwill among board members (Central Saanich at present sits on the board but does not vote).

Pollen said he could not see Central Saanich holding back the other participants.

Ald. Percy Frampton added that in any democratic system one vote can justifiably determine decisions.

RECREATION MAIN TOPIC

Sidney aldermanic candidates were grilled on their attitudes toward recreational needs at a pre-election meeting Thursday sponsored by Sidney and North Saanich Chamber of Commerce.

Incumbent Ald. Hugh Hollingworth said a close look must be taken at $12,500 annual budget proposed by Sidney Recreation Commission and hoped that more volunteer help would cut costs. The fall activities program has already paid dividends, he added.

Chris Anderson stated that if the people of Sidney do not have the time to help they must expect to pay for it.

"Six months ago this town had nothing to offer," he remarked, adding "$12,500 is a small sum considering we have a populatian of 5,000."

A warning that the recreational program must not become a baby-sitting service came from Bernard Ethier who felt that it is up to council to take the lead in provision of facilities.

SPORTS, NOT JAILS

Joseph Armstrong advocated that money be spent on sports centres now rather than on penitentiary expansion, which he said is being planned by the provincial government.

Strong support for the proposed Saanich Peninsula Agricultural and Recreational Association complex came from Ald. Hollingworth who said citizens could save themselves money if they contributed individually toward the $1 million centre.

Municipal support for such a project would add another half-million dollars to the cost, said Hollingworth, adding "if we don't spend it today, we will have to spend it tomorroy."

The meeting, chaired by H. N. Parrott, was attended by about 50 persons.

An important progress report from your Provincial Government on Hearing-aids

Your Government recently passed the Hearing-aid Regulation Act. A Hearing-aid Board has been established to administer the Act. It will provide protection and quality control for reputable hearing-aid dealers and consultants and the general public.

The prime objectives are:

1 To enforce the registration of all parties acting as hearing-aid dealers or consultants in the Province of British Columbia.

2 To examine the applications of those dealers and consultants seeking registration in the Province of British Columbia; to supervise their licencing; and to set regulations for their business conduct.

3 To handle all inquiries and complaints from the general public about hearing-aids or the way in which hearing-aids are advertised. In addition, and through the co-operative efforts of the hearing-aid retail industry, a pocket model hearing-aid and stock ear mold will be made available to all licenced hearing-aid dealers and consultants in the Province of British Columbia, and retailed at a price of fifty dollars ($50). These will be available from January 1, 1972.

Hearing-aid dealers and consultants and their employers must now contact the Board to commence licencing and registration procedures. All interested parties are invited to contact the Board. Write:

PAPER MILL CUTBACK CALLED DISASTROUS

MONTREAL (CP) — The production cutback of Consolidated-Bathurst Ltd.'s Bathurst, N.B., operations was termed disastrous and depressing by the head of the Canadian Union of Pulp and Paper Mill Workers.

L. H. Lorrain said the cutback, which will result in the layoff of some 325 workers, "can be viewed as nothing short of disastrous."

In a telegram to Jean Marchand, federal minister of regional economic expansion, he described the cutback as "yet another depressing example of the sorry state of the pulp and paper industry and our economy in general."

"We cannot let it happen, your government must surely take whatever action you deem necessary to prevent this mass layoff."

CEMP

One of the first preferred stock issues to take account of new income tax proposals was out today, a $10 million offering by a wholly-owned subsidiary of CEMP Investments Ltd., one of the Distillers Corp. Seagrams Ltd. group.

One million shares of $10 par value 7¼ per cent stock is offered by SECO-CEMP Ltd., controlled by the Bronfman family of Montreal, which owns 32 per cent of Distillers Seagrams.

Market value of SECO-CEMP is given as $308 million and dividend coverage as 10.9 times the most recent dividend of D-S.

The 7¼ per cent yield (offering price is $10) is reported to be equivalent under new tax laws to 9.7 per cent in bonds.

B of M

The Bank of Montreal reports balance of profit of $38.4 million or $1.12 a share in the year ended Oct. 31 compared with $35.9 million or $1.05 a share in 1970.

Balance of revenue was $96 million, up from $93.3 million in the previous fiscal year.

Accumulated appropriations for losses totalled $119.9 million in 1971 compared with $97.6 million in 1970.

The bank said assets climbed to more than $10.1 billion, an increase of $1.4 billion or 16.4 per cent over the 1970 fiscal year.

Sears R.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. report gross sales for the four weeks ended Nov. 27 were $991.4 million, up 8.7 per cent from the period last year.

Sears volume for the 43 weeks ended the same day was $8.7 billion, an increase of $596.6 million (7.4 per cent) over sales for a comparable period in 1970.

Vic. Mortgage

Gross rate of return will be lower with recent downward moves in interest borrowing rates, reports Douglas Hawkes, president of Victoria Mortgage Corp. Ltd.

He said a return to rates common five or six years ago could be expected.

Effective Jan. 1, expiring debentures will be renewed at lower rates — ranging from 8½ per cent for five years for $12,000 or more, to 7¾ per cent for one year. But those renewed for lesser amounts will be entitled to any bonuses that become available from development profits, which are foreseen for about the next four quarters.

Hawkes reported the surplus last quarter remained steady, falling only from $33,969 to $33,308.

Earnings Reinvested

OTTAWA (CP) — More than half the earnings made in Canada by foreign-owned investment in 22 years remained in Canada, federal government statistics show.

The percentage of profits taken out of Canada has declined over the period from 1946 to 1967, the latest years for which full statistics and estimates are available.

In the late 1940s and early 1950s, more than half the profits were paid out of Canada to the foreign owners of the investments. Lately, 55 to 60 per cent of the profits have remained in Canada for reinvestment in business expansion and other purposes.

Statistics Canada reported Thursday, in an analysis of Canada's international investment position, that Canada's net indebtedness rose in 1969 to $28.2 billion, from $4.2 billion in 1945.

In 1969, Canada and Canadians owned $18.8 billion of investments abroad, while foreign investors owned $46.9 billion of investments in Canada.

The indebtedness figures are based on so-called "book values"—bonds at par values and corporate stock at shareholder equity, not at the current values, which in the case of common stock, can be much higher.

Figures on earnings and their remittance abroad are available only to 1967. In that year, $1.5 billion was made by foreign investors, and $627 million was paid abroad after withholding taxes amounting to $72 million.

Appeal Rejected

MONTREAL (UPI) — The Quebec Securities Commission today rejected stock broker Harry Andrews' appeal against his removal as chairman of the Canadian Stock Exchange.

The CSE governing board's action in removing Andrews — unprecedented in financial circles — was coupled with announcement that the operations of his brokerage firm, Holland, Andrews, Perrier and Co. Ltd. were under investigation for "very serious" irregularities.

The firm has handled several underwritings of stock issues recently which have fluctuated widely in trading prices. A leading issue involved Pan American Mines Ltd., a company which claims — among its principles associates of U.S. financier Howard Hughes.

Computime Sues Ames

VANCOUVER (CP) — The trustee of bankrupt Computime Canada Ltd. is suing the brokerage house of E. A. Ames and Co. Ltd. for damages over the non-issue of $1 million of convertible sinking fund debentures.

George Donaldson, Computime's trustee in bankruptcy, filed the writ in B.C. Supreme Court Nov. 23.

Computime declared bankrupty in June, 1970, and a month later, A. S. Gill, the company's chairman, blamed the brokerage house for the bankruptcy.

Gill said First National City Overseas Investment Corp. of New York had agreed to buy $500,000 of an issue of $1 million 8 per cent convertible sinking fund debentures issued by Computime — provided the remaining $500,000 was subscribed for by other investors.

Gill said A. E. Ames had undertaken to secure orders for the debentures from Computime shareholders.

In the writ, the trustee claims damages suffered by Computime because A. E. Ames had said the orders were secured when they were not. It also seeks damages under a contract under which A. E. Ames agreed to buy any debentures not taken up by shareholders.

The writ claims that as a result of the debentures not being subscribed for, Computime suffered losses and heavy expenses to the extent that it could no longer meet its obligations as they fell due.

The writ also claims damages as the result of Computime being deprived of the $500,000 which First National was to have provided.

Computime went bankrupt with liabilities of $1.78 million.

Mayor Hopefuls Face the Press

Inner Harbor renewal and the proposed Reid Centre development were inevitably recurring themes as Victoria's four mayoralty candidates faced an avalanche of questions Thursday.

Candidates Courtney Haddock, Foster Isherwood, Peter Pollen and Bill Scott were grilled for about 75 minutes by reporters from local newspapers and radio stations, at a lunchtime press conference staged by the Chamber of Commerce.

Under spotlights at the top table, sandwiched between the media men, they didn't appear noticeably nervous although at times there were snappish replies criticizing the media in general.

MANY ANSWERS

The questioning also produced the expected quota of some straight answers, others not so straight and yet others which were downright confusing.

Pollen, first to be tackled concerning his stand on waterfront development and the Reid project, said there should be a total plan for the Inner Harbor before any decision on a "massive development" like the Reid centre.

Too little was known about the proposals and the scheme itself was "too big," he said, adding: "If we can buy the site — and I'm doubtful whether we can — we should try and work with the developer to build something back from the foreshore in a density commensurate with the area."

Haddock made it clear he supports the Reid proposal in principle, saying he doesn't believe developers are "an evil type of citizen."

If the modified Reid plan becomes reality, he noted, it will generate $450,000 a year in taxes. "Where else shall we get that amount of money?" he asked.

Haddock said he prefers good high-density development to a "proliferation of three-storey walk-ups and frame houses," and feels the apartments along Douglas facing Beacon Hill Park are a lot more attractive than the buildings that were there before.

Scott, who complained at one point that too many questions were being directed to Haddock and Pollen and too few to himself and Isherwood, dismissed all discussion of the Reid centre and Inner Harbor development as "meaningless abstractions" and "gobbledygook."

"The most important problem is where the money is coming from," he said. "We can solve all the problems if the money is available."

Scott had earlier charged that Premier Bennett's "Gilbert and Sullivan municipal act" is making a financial prisoner of Victoria, and that due to the inequalities of the act $5 million is being "siphoned" out of the city by an elite few.

He didn't elaborate, but promised he would reveal at a press conference today how the city administration could find a vast new source of revnue.

Isherwood, asked why he had chosen to leave Saanich to contest the Victoria mayoralty, said when he made his decision in September one Victoria alderman had had a heart attack, the mayor was unwell and Pollen was out looking "all over Greater Victoria" for a possible mayoralty candidate.

There was a lot of indecision and bickering, Isherwood said, and he felt the city needed some leadership which he was experienced enough to provide.

AMALGAMATION

To another question, Isherwood said he favored amalgamation rather than "abdication" to some increased form of regional government "because regional government is becoming very expensive and we are building an empire in that field."

But amalgamation was certain to produce efficiency and economies, he added.

Haddock said Victoria would have to take a careful look at the amalgamation concept, which it had already mooted three times and each time received rejection.

There was some applause as Haddock went on: "It may not be to our advantage to take on the cost load of a large, sprawling municipality such as Saanich."

But Scott took the opposite view, claiming the move would bring about "an amalgamation of the aristocracy of brains" to tackle all the problems of Greater Victoria.

Pollen charged that press coverage tends to stress the "dissenting, controversial aspects" of city hall business, and added that Haddock's administration over the past two years has been "more constructive and less destructive" than any in post-war years.

Reminded by a reporter that he was talking about the same mayor he had earlier accused of suffering from "$1.49 myopia," Pollen retorted:

"I am not defending his administration, I think it's deplorable. But you people (the news media) make it out a lot worse than it is."

'MY OWN THINKING'

British Columbia's school system desperately needs "greater individualization in instruction, particularly in the younger grades," according to a candidate for election to the Saanich School Board.

Mrs. Pat Peach, 4320 Glanford, making her second bid for a board seat, says: "We need to encourage our best teachers, to find each child's area of interest, and help them to enjoy learning."

"I am particularly appalled by the lack of facilities for children with learning difficulties."

Mrs. Peach, a medical secretary-bookkeeper, is married to a teacher. But she denies the suggestion she represents any special interest group.

"I really very much resent the implication that I am a puppet of any organization. My husband is a teacher, but that only increases my interest in and concern for education.

"I have always done my own thinking and I intend to continue to do so. I am not a 'candidate of the professionals'. I am a candidate for the children."

Mrs. Peach says she is also concerned about the present Saanich School Board's approach to community use of schools. The policy, she says, "is narrow and lacks foresight because it doesn't go far enough."

STAMP ERROR DISCLOSED

OTTAWA (CP) — The post office said Wednesday it inadvertently issued and sold one sheet of the Maple Leaf In Autumn stamp which was printed without the words Canada, Autumn and Automne and the numeral 7.

The error apparenlty resulted, a spokesman said in an interview, when two sheets of stamps stuck together while being printed.

It is the second error made in printing the maple leaf series. A few sheets of the Maple Leaf In Spring stamp, issued April 14, were not fully perforated, and at least one sheet was sold.

One to four additional faulty sheets of 50 Maple Leaf In Autumn stamps may exist, the spokesman said.

COMMUNICATION LACK RAPPED

The lack of communication between Oak Bay council and the municipality's residents came under fire Thursday when 45 persons attended an all-candidate meeting in Windsor Park pavilion.

Leading the attack was aldermanic candidate Douglas McLelland.

He accused the council of being completely unaware of the residents' feelings when considering a developer's proposal to build two highrise towers on the block bounded by Windsor, Currie, Goodwin and Newport, overlooking Windsor Park.

Ald. Brian Smith said wage agreements should be negotiated on a wider scale than just municipal.

BUNN'S SUPPORT

School trustee Peter Bunn said Greater Victoria school board also believed in broadening the range so the employer had greater power when dealing with the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Bunn disagreed with aldermanic aspirant Lawrie Mann who felt that experts should be hired to arrange Oak Bay's planning on a long-term basis.

Bunn said: "I disagree that experts should tell us what to do in Oak Bay. We had Spence-Sales (the man who presented the twin-storey highrise proposition) who wished to create an abortion. We pay the shot and we should call the tune. We don't need any high-priced help from Toronto."

Ald. Norman Pimlott was applauded when he said, "I'm for keeping the municipality of Oak Bay the bedroom of Victoria. It's an enviable position to be in."

Another aldermanic candidate, Elmer McEwen, was unable to attend because of sickness.

Mayor Frances Elford, who has been returned by acclamation for another two-year term, agreed with members of the audience who said they would like to see council discuss matters at informal meetings with residents of the municipality.

Thursday's meeting was sponsored by the Windsor Park Neighborhood Group.

Italians in Grip Of Many Tensions

By DAVID MAZZARELLA

ROME (AP) — Premier Emilio Colombo recently described Italy as a "miracle, a nation that wakes up each morning to the freezing shower of the most anguished alarms, the most apocalyptic threats, and nevertheless moves forward."

This view will be put to a test in the coming months.

The country evokes an image of a carefree existence but it is beset by an unhappy confluence of economic, political and religious tensions. Italy is bracing for what many believe will be a winter of discontent brought on by unemployment, rising prices and industrial stagnation.

Marxist and conservative parties are building up to a confrontation—the election in December of a new president. Colombo's cabinet must by law hand in its resignation to the man chosen. This will formally open a government crisis during which socialists and conservatives will battle to bring the centre-left alignment closer to their own views.

The resignation must be submitted even if the parliament re-elects Giuseppe Saragat as president. That is unlikely because of a one-term tradition and the presence of other powerful candidates.

CHURCH HOT TOPIC

The political future is further darkened by a bitter row between conservative Roman Catholics and others over a planned national referendum on Italy's divorce law. Scheduled for the spring, the vote could divide the nation pitting the church against anti-clerics.

There is virtual unanimity in assessing Italy's industrial stagnation as the worst since the Second World War.

The growth of national income in 1971 is being estimated at two or three per cent.

For the first time since the war, industrial production is down. The production index for the first nine months of this year is 3.4 per cent below that of a year earlier. The Common Market has noted that all its members except Italy enjoyed economic expansion in the first quarter.

Since the "hot autumn" of 1969, industry and labor have been locked in what Gianfranco Isalberti, public relations chief of Pirelli Rubber Co., calls a "permanent state of conflict."

Although labor agitation has been light compared with 1969, Italy lost 6.6 million work days to strikes in 1971's first six months. That compared with 3.8 million in France and 198,000 in Germany.

Absenteeism has further plagued industry.

Many industrialists, especially those of the old school unaccustomed to defiance by workers, are calling it quits.

Seven Candidates Trying For Capital Region Board

BOULTER

Unorganized areas are the victim of an unfair distribution of municipal tax benefits, according to Frederick Boulter, a candidate in the Dec. 11 Capital Regional District elections.

Boulter, who is running against three others for the Langford seat, says three per cent of the provincial sales tax goes to municipalities but not to unorganized areas such as Langford.

He said the same happens in the distribution of fees coming from municipal licence plates for trucks. He will work, if elected, to have licence fees, which range from $2 to $25, removed from truckers not registered in the city.

Boulter, a shipwright who lives at 808 Brock, has been involved in community affairs since he and his wife moved to Langford in 1958.

He was a trustee on the Sooke School Board for six years, and was its first member on the Vancouver Island Regional Library Board. He is also a past president of the Langford PTA.

He said he has a special interest in town planning, and as a representative on the regional board would push for it taking over Victoria-owned Thetis Lake Park "at little or no expense to the taxpayer."

BUVYER

Public services must be extended on a planned basis in the rapidly growing unorganized area before it takes in more population drift, says George Buvyer, who is running for the Colwood seat on the Capital Region District Board.

Buvyer, a 54-year-old high school teacher who lives at 3830 Metchosin, is running against incumbent Richard Emery.

He said he is dissatisfied with "the present piecemeal zoning changes without proper detailed planning of necessary facilities such as adequate highways to handle the increased traffic flow."

Buvyer advocates regional government for those functions which are common to municipalities but self-government for those responsibilities rising from "the character and tradition" of any particular community.

For Colwood, he supports "the concept that short of full municipal status the area should have more control of its development."

The regional board itself should remain "an administrative body only and should not be allowed to become a fourth level of government."

Buvyer, who has been secretary and chairman of the Albert Head Ratepayers' Association for four years, said he has worked hard to increase effective communication between the regional board and the people of Colwood.

"An air of secrecy still prevades the Ocean View development proposal. The public should be informed by their regional representatives."

Buvyer is also a member of the Glangeolme Chamber of ublic Opinion.

EMERY

The massive Ocean View housing development proposed for Colwood isn't at the stage yet where it should be a political issue, says Richard Emery, who is running for his third term on the Capital Regional District Board.

Emery, 41, seeking the Colwood seat, said the board ad hoc committee, of which he is member, has yet to take a close look at Ocean Cement's plan to develop its Metchosin Road gravel pit site into a big housing development.

The project, which has received approval in principle by the Capital Region, has been drawing opposition from some segments within the unincorporated area.

"I don't wish to make it a political football," Emery said.

Emery, an electrical contractor, who lives at 527 Allanddale, said his main goals are "good, sensible government, practical planning, and development of recreation programs."

He said that Colwood should have more control over their zoning but added "how can local people zone or plan? They can't look far ahead." The Capital Region plans and zones Colwood and the adjoining unorganized areas.

He supports the region taking over the city-owned Thetis Lake Park if the people approve of an half-mill increase over five years.

JENKINS

Semi-autonomy for the unorganized areas is the platform of Aubrey Jenkins, 55, a semi-retired accountant, in his bid to win the Langford seat on the Capital Regional District Board in the Dec. 11 election.

Jenkins lives at 3025 Glen Lake

Jenkins, president pro tem of the recently-formed Glangcolme (Langford, Colwood, Metchosin) Chamber of Community Opinion, says these areas should take over local planning and zoning which is now carried out by the regional board.

"We don't feel the 15 other members of the board should tell us how we should zone. It's ridiculous."

However, Jenkins doesn't favor full incorporation, and he contends that higher levels of government should take care of welfare, policing, public works and health.

He said his platform represents the majority opinion of the Glangcolme Chamber. He added that he and fellow member George Buvyer, who is running as a Colwood candidate, are not officially Chamber candidates because "we don't feel we're large enough yet to be representative of the area."

MACLEOD

The need for parks in Langford is a prime concern expressed by Donald S. MacLeod, 39, who is seeking a seat on the Capital Regional District Board in the Dec. 11 elections.

MacLeod, who owns and operates a Langford-based accounting and advertising company, is opposing incumbent Langford director Earl Pallister, Aubrey Jenkins and Fred Boulter. He said if he is elected he will strive for zoning bylaws to require developers to set aside a portion of each major development for use as playgrounds.

He will also see that "our green belt is protected and that park facilities are expanded, not reduced" and cooperate with the recreation commission in developing recreational facilities fully.

MacLeod said another main goal will be "to ensure through constant effort that the independence of the Langford home-owner is not placed in jeopardy by thoughtless planning or the lack if it."

He said that authorities need to be impressed that Langford is the largest of the unincorporated areas and therefore has problems that require assistance.

MacLeod, who lives at 840 Armcote, is one the board of advisers for Creditel of Canada and has served the community in recent years as a Cubmaster and hockey coach.

MEAKES

Metchosin needs to be "stirred up" about its future, contends Walter Meakes, 51, who is challenging incumbent Ken Rainey for the area's seat on the Capital Regional District Board.

Meakes, 51, a retired plumbing contractor who lives at 635 Lombard, has been active in the community as chairman of the commissions which set up plans for the Juan de Fuca arena and swimming pool.

He said because Metchosin is on the verge of becoming more of an urban area its residents "need to catch up on what is going on."

He said residents are starting to become concerned about the proposed Ocean View housing project for Colwood which would, for instance, greatly increase traffic and create the need for more hospital and school facilities.

"The growth in the area will soon put us in the big leagues."

He envisioned his present main task, if elected, to bring back to Metchosin residents a good idea of what is happening on the regional board.

Meakes has been the Metchosin fire district protection trustee for the past ten years.

PALLISTER

The regionalization of the Greater Victoria Water Board will be "the next big thing" before the Capital Regional District Board, says Earl Pallister, incumbent director for Langford.

Pallister, 49, who has a heavy field of three running against him in the Dec. 11 elections,was first elected at bye-elections in 1968, serving a one-year term, followed by re-election for two years.

He said he favors regionalization of the water district, which is now owned by Victoria, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt, and predicted "serious discussion" will take place on regionalization in early 1972.

He also favors bringing local planning "back to the people — in an orderly fashion." He said "we could have rushed at it, hired more people and created excessive taxes" but instead "a good honest plan" is on the way.

He also pledged more recreation development as he pointed to the recent creation of the Juan de Fuca park and ice arena and the new senior citizens' centre.

Pallister, who lives at 2275 Millstream Road, is a parks officer at Fort Rodd Hill.

Piao Fall Official

TOKYO (AP) — An editorial on party leadership published Wednesday in the leading Chinese Communist journals made no mention of Deputy Party Chairman Lin Piao, indicating that Mao Tsetung's heir-designate really has fallen from grace.

References to Mao also were subdued, suggesting the 77-year-old party leader has been slightly downgraded either at his own request or on orders of the party's central committee.

Lin's name has not appeared in the Chinese press since Sept. 8, when he, Mao and Premier Chou En-lai sent a joint message of congratulations to North Korea on its national day.

Wiser, Tolerant, Real —Lessons of the Road

The Thumbs-Up Club is well and truly launched and we'll just have this one more brief recruitment pep-talk before we pass on to more serious things.

I'm not able to reply to the considerable numbers of people who have sent me 35 cents for a windshield sticker, but the first batch of them have been sent out and there's a hundred or more here for those of you who may care to join in.

You were out to lunch when this began? Well, it's just that this is a demonstrably heartless town when it comes to motorists picking up people without transportation and if seemed a pleasant idea for those of us who enjoy doing that to make some small gesture — show our own flag, so to speak — just for the heck of it.

A fast sampling of the first load of mail indicates that a good many people have been thinking along the same lines. Here are a few typical excerpts:

★ ★ ★

"I'm not one of those 'nicer people,' whatever that means, but I'm ready to pick up anybody along the highway who needs a lift," writes Jim Williams with a three-dollar donation to the club.

★ ★ ★

"Here's my 35 cents for the Yes sticker," writes Bud Pauls. "A year or so ago I wrote a letter to the paper 'as a public service' and told how I got rid of those scruffy young people on our highways: 'I pick them up.' As a result I received some kooky phone calls and nutty letters, but I've also enjoyed the company, for minutes or hours, of many interesting people. Once, at Hope, two young kids I had picked up washed my car with their jackets soaked in ditch water while I had a coffee. (They had refused to be my guests.) Never have I had any trouble. Often I have been saddened by their departures. Sometimes, I think, all involved have become a little wiser, more tolerant, more real."

★ ★ ★

"That's a great idea," writes Michael Callan. "Not only will it get people around with less cars downtown, but it will help people here to be more sociable."

★ ★ ★

"Congratualtions on a really great idea: I predict it will become a national movement," writes Fred Gillies. "Just one little thing: Have you ever stopped to offer a ride to a middle-aged or elderly lady during bad weather and been rewarded with a withering look and a stony silence as if you were a mobile Jack The Ripper?"

★ ★ ★

W. J. Havelaar: "Count me in. A fine idea and one that will work. I wanted you to know that there are people who, like yourself, feel that the luxury of a car puts the owner on obligation to help those who are less fortunate. The sight, every day, of hundreds of cars carrying one occupant to his or her work and back is a sickening experience."

Aline Flood, who lives away out on the West Coast Road, picks up absolutely everybody who needs a ride and writes:

"A woman, alone in a car, isn't 'expected' to stop to give a man a lift. There are a lot of civilization's lousy rules that I don't use and that's one of them. I've had nothing but courtesy and appreciation, sometimes awesome in its sincerity. Take these people as you find them; don't be judge and jury for the way they look and dress. They'll all furnish a worthwhile contact with your fellow human being and — who knows? — you may need a ride, yourself, some day. The whole process of picking up hikers reminds me of a plaque I once saw on the wall of a Catholic hospital. It read: 'God does not count our deeds . . . he weighs them.'"

Mustn't wrap this up without a thank-you to James Golightly, president of Sooke Stages, who has reason not to be fond of hitchhikers, but has written an amiable letter commenting on my facetious remark that the Happy Valley bus runs every other week.

"We are presently preparing to inaugurate a new schedule which will reduce service to Happy Valley and Metchosin to 56 buses every two weeks, still 56 times more service than you state in your column," he notes.

On the subject of hitchhikers: "I find that most of them with whom I have had dealings are vociferous about the absence of a viable transportation system, but are among the most stubborn about supporting such a system when one is offered. They complain about not enough buses, but refuse to put a quarter in the box to make it worth somebody's while to run the bus. Where the service is used it is continued and improved.

"While we indeed sympathize with people in need of transportation, we are not greatly moved by the plight of a youngster we saw this morning who stood in one of our bus stops, hitchhiking, while the bus loaded its regular passengers . . . This lad exemplifies the crowd who complain about lack of transportation for them because they won't use it.

"If you have your little stickers printed, please send us a few. We'd like these people to ride our buses as well as in your car."

Rubble Destroys Harbor Beach

By CLEMENT CHAPPLE

One of the few recreational stretches of Victoria's harbor beach is under a developer's rockfill and no one has granted permission.

The rock fill was dumped by Diamond Development Ltd. despite an earlier report from the city parks department that Barnard Beach should not be sacrificed for development.

Parks director Cliff Bate was asked last year to report on the recreational value of the beach and recommended against filling the area as proposed by an earlier developer.

Bate said today he is annoyed to find now that the developer of the building under construction has dumped rock for a roadway at least 14 feet below the high water mark.

Other city hall officials expressed annoyance at the fill and said they gave no permission. The rockfill is being used as a truck lane for heavy transport to the development.

"The area is under the jurisdiction of the federal government and a federal official said today there has been no decision made on whether the fill will be allowed because no applications have been received.

Charles Brooks of the Department of Transport said however the situation is "in hand."

He said there must be permission given to lease the land and there must be clearance under the federal navigable waters legislation.

Before the rockfill was dumped, the beach was used as a recreational spot by residents of the area. At high tide the rockfill obliterates the beach entirely.

The city at present is negotiating with Ottawa to acquire an adjacent site which is needed for a park.

The incident occurred in a bunkhouse car of a train standing near the Victoria Plywood plant on Hallowell Road. The train runs up and down the Island carrying workmen and equipment for track and bridge repair.

Colwood RCMP officers who went to investigate the shooting were held at bay for 10 minutes by a man wielding a shotgun before McKenna was arrested.

Pot Trucker Guilty

Richard V. Bird, 23, today was convicted of importing 74 pounds, one ounce of marijuana into Canada Aug. 29.

The drug was concealed in a camper-truck that arrived on the Black Ball ferry from Port Angeles.

Judge Edmond St. Jorre remanded Bird to Dec. 17 for presentence report and sentence.

Bird has been in custody, unable to raise $25,000 bail, since he was arrested Aug. 29.

St. Jorre in today's judgment referred to the four submissions of defence counsel Edward Pollard earlier in the trial.

The judge said the Customs Act could not be invoked in the case.

Pollard earlier had said it was not clear under which act the accused had been charged.

UNNECESSARY

St. Jorre said it was "unnecessary" for the Crown to state the actual act if the charge followed the wording of the statute itself.

St. Jorre said the Crown had done this, adding that prosecutor Cecil Branson pointed out in summation that Bird was charged under section five of the Narcotics Control Act.

The section deals the illegal importing or exporting of a narcotic to or from Canada.

The judge ruled that the Crown was correct in laying the charge at Victoria as he viewed the offence as "a continuing one."

Pollard had said the prosecution failed to prove importation took place three miles from the city when the accused entered Canadian waters.

St. Jorre ruled that Branson did not have to prove Bird a Canadian because the offence was continuing.

BID FAILED

Pollard's contention was that the Crown failed to prove the accused a Canadian. The Criminal Code states consent of the Attorney-General of Canada is required for proceedings if the accused is an alien.

Branson countered, saying there was no evidence Bird was an alien and it was not incumbent on the Crown to prove he was not a citizen of Canada.

St. Jorre said testimony of the first mate on the M.V. Coho, which travelled from Port Angeles to Victoria Aug. 29, "negatized" the defence position that the ship may have stopped somewhere between Port Angeles and Victoria the day of the offence.

Nurses Call for Mediator

Bargaining 'Sham'

Registered nurses will apply for a government mediation officer after breaking off negotiations Thursday in Vancouver.

The sudden move came one day after it was learned that the government has placed a 6.5 per cent ceiling on salaries and fringe benefit increases in 1972.

The Registered Nurses Association of B.C., with about 5,500 members involved in the negotiations with 75 hospitals, criticized the B.C. Hospitals Association for saying that it would be governed by the ceiling.

"This was tantamount to an ultimatum to take it or leave it, which in our view made a sham of the whole bargaining process," the RNABC said in a statement.

"If this ultimatum had been accepted by the RNABC bargaining committee it would have set a precedent that would jeopardize the bargaining position not only of the RNABC but of many other groups in the province for the present and future years as well.

"The threat was made by implication that unless we accepted the ceiling, staff cuts would result and patients would suffer. In our view patients have a right to good nursing care and nurses have a right to remuneration on a par with that of other groups in society."

NURSES' WELFARE

Margaret Neylan, president of the RNABC, said nurses have a responsibility for maintaining good patient care "but we do not believe that this can be achieved at the expense of the welfare of nurses."

The 10,500-strong Hospital Employees Union, representing non-professional staff, said it will not accept the pay and fringe benefit increase ceiling. A formal statement was expected early next week after a provincial executive meeting.

The government's move, made known in a letter to hospital boards by D. M. Cox, deputy minister of hospital insurance, said there is a limit to the funds available for hospitals.

The only exceptions to the 6½ per cent ceiling on pay raises and fringe benefits would be unemployment insurance and superannuation.

The Hospital Employees Union, which moved to the mediation officer stage last month, has been seeking a 25 per cent across-the-board wage increase over two years. The RNABC has not publicly disclosed its proposals.

Ray McCready, secretary-manager of the Hospital Employees Union, said a major point was wage parjty for men and women. To achieve this, however, women would have to get more than the 6.5 per cent ceiling.

In October, the government announced it will not share in 1972 teacher salary increases beyond 6.5 per cent. Civil servants received average salary increases of 6.5 per cent this year.

John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union, said he would not be surprised to see civil servants held again to 6.5 per cent.

"I hope that the teachers will fight, the hospital workers will fight . . . we would fight this if it is imposed on us," he said.

'Tightwad' May Dispel Symphony's Money Blues

A notorious tightwad and the world's worst violinist may save Victoria's symphony from going under financially.

And to see him perform, it may cost $50 a seat.

Directors of the Victoria Symphony Society agreed in principle to bring in comedian Jack Benny for a benefit concert in April.

In a memo to directors, general manager John Addicott envisaged making a minimum of $30,000 if "a powerhouse of man can be found to rise up and take over the dynamic leadership of this event."

Actually, Benny is not a cheapskate, for Addicott, in a conversation with the comedian's agent Wednesday, found that his fee would only be $1,000, just to cover travelling, accommodation and a reception area.

And Benny is not actually a terrible violinist.

CONVINCE AGENT

"He's a qualified musician who has considerable experience in playing with orchestras," Addicott said.

He said arrangements for the concert will be confirmed on Wednesday if he can convince Benny's agent that there is "an upswelling of interest" in such an event here.

The date of Benny's appearance with the symphony will likely be April 21, at the McPherson Playhouse.

Addicott proposed selling tickets for $100 for 200 couples, which would fill up half the theatre and bring in $20,000. The balance of tickets could go from $10 down to $5.

High-priced ticket owners would then be allowed to attend a reception afterwards.

"It need not be an expensive affair and could consist of hors d'oeuvres and champagne."

"This could be on enormous life-saver for the symphony," Addicott said.

BENNY
. . . saviour of the day?

Di Castri Heads Symphony

Architect John Di Castri was Thursday night named president of the troubled Victoria Symphony Society, to complete the term of Stuart Soward, who resigned a week ago as a result of the organization's financial woes.

Di Castri, who has been a member of the board of directors for less than a year, was elected by acclamation after a second nominee, John Graeme, withdrew and pledged his full support to the new president.

Soward's resignation came last week after he warned the board of a possible $40,000 deficit. Albert Hestler, vice-president for finance, also resigned at the same time after telling the directors the society would be "insolvent within the next 18 months."

★ ★ ★

Following Di Castri's election as president Thursday night, the directors voted to start with a fresh slate by rescinding the appointments of the entire executive committee.

Robert Lapp, 4924 Wesley Road, was then elected vice-president for finance. The rest of the new executive committee will be elected later.

Di Castri, in a short address immediately following his election, said the society "is in deep trouble."

"Our image as far as the community goes is tarnished," he said, and to suggest the troubles of the society hinge on dollars and cents is an oversimplification.

To salvage itself, Di Castri said, the society must present a united front.

★ ★ ★

"There is no room for pettiness and personal vendettas.

"Each and every one of us has to act with integrity and respect for each other," he said. Any member of the board who cannot conduct himself in an acceptable fashion, he continued, should resign his seat.

"I cannot tolerate pettiness, I cannot tolerate gossip."

Di Castri said the "whole business structure (of the society) has to be very carefully considered" before a solution can be resolved. And he recommended against a community drive at the present time.

"We have to put our house in order before going to the community."

'Save Our Swans' Cry Comes From Saanich

The hue and cry, "leave our swans alone," is being raised by swan lovers who learned Thursday that Saanich parks committee has agreed to export the grateful birds to Powell River and Waterloo, Ont.

David Stirling, well-known ornithologist, disagrees with parks administrator Bert Richman that there is a population explosion of swans and that the only solution is to export them.

Richman estimates there are more than 100 swans in Saanich — mostly in Elk-Beaver Lakes and Portage Inlet — and he is concerned about it.

But Stirling says 100 swans are nothing to worry about if when most of the waterways in the capital region have no swans.

Saanich should be more concerned over the human population explosion than over that of swans, he said.

"I would rather see more swans than more people in Saanich," he said.

STIRLING
. . . no worries

The trouble is that few swans had been seen over a period of years. Then, when they became more noticeable, some people started to think they were over-abundant, says Stirling.

He said swans could be transplanted to Sooke Basin, Matheson Lake, Thetis Lake and the Gulf Islands.

If the swans are left alone, he says, the population would level out and many birds would seek other breeding areas, such as the Gulf Islands and the Cowichan Valley.

"Last August I canoed on Elk Lake and counted only 70 swans and six cygnets," he said.

Stirling noted that Saanich should be thankful for its swans as they feed on Elk Lake's aquatic plants, a nuisance to boaters and swimmers.

BRANDON — The waiting game isn't one the Victoria Cougars want to play.

They tried the style for two periods and Brandon Wheat Kings rushed in to hang up a 6-4 Western Canada Hockey League defeat on the Cougars here Thursday.

Consequently the Cougars are still waiting for their first road victory after 15 tries. The 16th attempt will be made tonight when they move into Winnipeg on the second leg of their four-game swing through the Prairies.

Certainly, the Cougars had a chance to break their starving road manners Thursday against the Eastern Division leaders. The Wheat Kings were ready to be had, an opinion shared by Brandon coach Rudy Pilous.

"Too many of my big guys were out for a skate," he said. "They wouldn't believe me that the Cougars could give them trouble."

The trouble was, the Cougars started too late. Brandon stepped off to a 2-1 first-period lead, thanks to two goals in 19 seconds, went into the third period with a 5-3 advantage.

Winger Don Morrison, with his second goal of the night and his ninth of the season, made it a 5-4 game midway in the final period before Brandon's Robbie Neale settled the issue with an open-net goal in the final period.

Cougars Missed on Late Chances

Harvey Schmidt and Wayne Bianchin scored Victoria's other goals while rookie Grant Farncomb, Dale Cook, Grant Thomas and Neil Melnyk got the Wheaties off and running.

The Wheat Kings got their jump because the Cougars lay back during the first two periods. Rather than force the play, the Cougars seemed intent on waiting for breaks.

It didn't work.

The Cougars' looked far better when they forcer the pace. Especially in the final 10 minutes of the game. They took charge and pressured Brandon's defence into making numerous mistakes.

The Cougars in fact were unfortunate in not forcing overtime. Jerry Dudar, alone and unmarked in front of the Brandon net, was victimized by Wheat King goalie Dave McLelland at the 15:40 mark. And a minute later Victoria's Greg Robinson came in on a good chance and grazed the goalpost behind McLelland.

A whirlwind finish was made to order for the Cougars when Cook drew a roughing penalty with a minute left in the game. The Cougars got the faceoff in Brandon's zone and Victoria goaltender Darryl Fedorak rushed out in favor of a second extra attacker.

The move backfired when Cougars failed to keep the puck in the Brandon zone. That allowed Neale to step up and score the all-important insurance goal.

Fedorak made 29 stops compared to the 27 handled by McLelland. Both had their shining moments. Fedorak was at his best in the second period when the Wheat Kings outshot the waiting Cougars, 18-8. The Victoria goaltender made his best saves at the expense of Dale Coates, Neale and Bob Murdoch.

McLelland's best thwarted Perry Robinson, Tim Struch and Dudar.

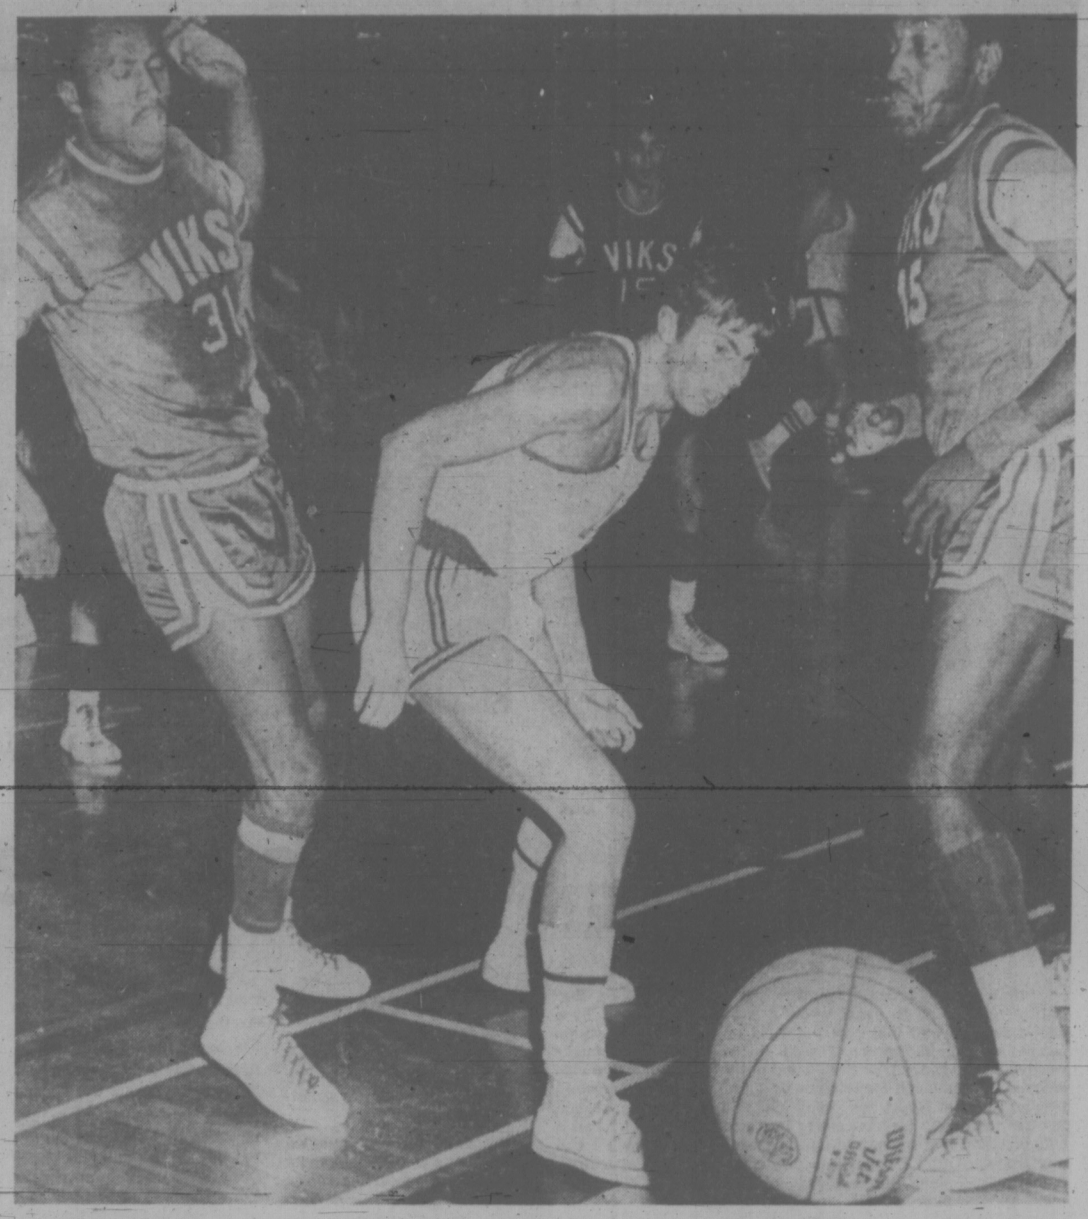
ICE CHIPS — It was a comparatively tame affair with only 12 minors and a misconduct called by referee Wayne Beamish ... the misconduct went to Bianchin at game's end when he felt Beamish missed a tripping call ... Brandon drew seven of the minors and Schmidt counted his breakaway goal when the Cougars were shorthanded ... centre Chris Riddell sat out the game and winger Gary Howatt dressed as the extra forward but along with rookie Rick LaPointe didn't get any ice time.

All the players wore helmets for the first time ... it's in keeping with a league edict that came into effect Dec. 1 ... Greg Robinson, Morrison and Schmidt played well for the Cougars ...



MAN IN MIDDLE during scramble for loose ball in intercollegiate exhibition basketball game at University of Victoria Thursday is UVic's Doug Walton. Although Walton came up with ball on this play, UVic Vikings were outmuscled most of the way by bigger Western Washington State squad and dropped 79-55 decision to American visitors. Victorians start tonight in tourney at Vancouver.

Goal Famine Ended By Buffalo Captain

By Canadian Press

Assuming captaincy of a National Hockey League club can be a burden at any time. But when that club is foundering, the load is that much more difficult.

Sid Smith discovered it during the 1950s when Toronto Maple Leafs were permanent playoff outcasts. The pressures finally forced him into an early retirement.

Young Gerry Meehan is faced with the same pressures this year at Buffalo, where the Sabres are firmly entrenched in last place in the now expanded NHL's East Division.

Meehan, named by coach Punch Imlach to replace veteran Floyd Smith earlier this season, responded to the early challenge but had been blanked for more than a month before his score Thursday night launched Buffalo to a 2-0 win over Los Angeles Kings, tailenders in the West.

In the only other game, Detroit Red Wings and Philadelphia Flyers tied 1-1.

The Sabres played without veteran winger Dick Duff who announced his retirement after 16 full seasons. The Sabres were the 35-year-old Kirkland Lake, Ont., native's fifth NHL team.

He played previously under Imlach at Toronto and later had stints with New York Rangers, Montreal Canadiens and Los Angeles before moving on to Buffalo in December, 1970.

Clothiers Trip Tenacious Foes

Robertson's Men's Wear, ahead by just one point at half-time, staged a strong second-half rally Thursday night to defeat Independents 72-56 in a Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League game at Cedar Hill Junior High School.

Victory moved Robertson's into a second-place tie with Independents. Both teams have played 10 games.

John Hart struck for 13 of his game-total of 20 points in the second half for the winners, who led 34-33 at the intermission. The tenacious Independents matched Robertson's point for point and trailed 52-51 before the Clothiers' late rush.

Barry Burch netted 14 points for Robertson's, followed by Doug Latta and Alex Brayden with 13 apiece. Bob Burrows was tops for Independents with 13.

Non-Winner Out in Front; Rain Halts Disney Event

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Terry Dill, leading the first round of the $150,000 Walt Disney World Open golf tournament by two strokes over Jack Nicklaus, says a back injury four months ago "may be the best thing that ever happened to me."

Rain today forced postponement of the second round until Saturday. The tournament, scheduled to end Sunday, now will conclude with a single round Monday.

Dill, a non-winner in 10 years on the pro tour, closed quickly for a seven-under-par 65 and the first-round lead in dark, drizzly weather Thursday.

It was only the fourth start in as many months for the 6-foot-3 Dill, who held a one-stroke lead over fellow Texan Dave Eichelberger, alone in second with a 66 on the 6,924-yard Magnolia course at the Disney World.

Nicklaus, who shared the pre-tourney favorite's role with Lee Trevino, headed a group of four at 67. The others were former Masters champion Bob Goalby, Jim Wiechers and Gary Groh.

Trevino, complaining that he is tired and putting poorly, had a 70 and Arnold Palmer was obviously disgusted after a 71.

Dill, an Austin, Tex., resident, said the layoff that was necessary after he tore some muscles in his arm forced him into a new business—golf course architecture.

"It may be the best thing that ever happened to me."

BOXING, WRESTLING ON SATURDAY SLATE

Fans of squared-circle combat will have an opportunity to take in two events on Saturday.

First on the menu is the Vancouver Island Triangle amateur wrestling meet at the YM-YWCA gymnasium, and perhaps for dessert, one could take in the B.C. Festival of Winter Sports boxing card at Central Junior High School.

Nanaimo High School, Royal Roads Military College and the host YMCA club will each have a wrestler competing in 10 weight divisions. The contest, which runs from 2 to 6 p.m., is a development meet for the Festival competition in Nanaimo, Dec. 10 and 11.

Victoria Boys' Club, London Boxing Club, Campbell River and Nanaimo teams are entered in the 12-bout boxing card which begins at 7:30 p.m.

Nats Nipped As Calgary Regains Lead

CALGARY — Captain Brian Walker scored one goal and assisted on two others here Thursday to lead Calgary Centennials to a 6-0 drubbing over Vancouver Nats and back into sole possession of first place in the Western Canada Hockey League's western division.

Victory moved the Cents one point ahead of Edmonton Oil Kings who meet the Nats tonight in the Alberta capital. Calgary holds two games in hand over the Oil Kings.

Goaltender John Davidson, with the best goals-against average in the league, lowered his average further by recording his fourth shutout of the season — three of them against Vancouver.

Ski Report

Fresh snow has fallen during the week and skiers will be happy to learn that Green Mountain will begin operations this weekend.

There is now a 36-inch total of snow and the temperature was hovering around 28 degrees this morning.

All tows will be running and the access gate is open until 9 p.m. today and between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Vikings Prep for Tourney

University of Victoria Vikings, warming up for their opening game tonight in the Totem men's basketball tournament at the University of British Columbia's War Memorial gymnasium, were chilled in an exhibition game Thursday night at UVic.

Western Washington State Vikings used their extra height to advantage and expanded a 40-32 half time lead into a 79-55 romp over the UVic crew.

Tom Holmes led UVic with 20 points while Fergie Angison chipped in 10 points.

UVic meets UBC Thunderbirds for their opening game in the Totem tourney, which is in its 19th year, but hasn't been played since 1968. Also in the tournament are Simon Fraser University Clansmen and Lakehead University Nor'westers from Thunder Bay.

Clansmen and Nor'westers open the tourney at 7:30 tonight while Thunderbirds and Vikings clash at 9:15.

Losers of tonight's games meet in the consolation final at 7:30 p.m. Saturday while the winners tussle for the title at 9:15.

Meanwhile, UVic Vikettes take on unbeaten UBC Thunderettes tonight and Saturday in Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association women's league games, also at Vancouver.

Vikettes currently hold down first place in the Western division with a 4-0 record while Thunderettes are 2-0. University of Calgary is in third spot with a 2-4 mark and University of Lethbridge and University of Alberta are tied for fourth place with 1-3 records.

Vikettes' Rose Jossul tops individual scoring in the west with 55 points from four games.

Rules Tightened for Skiers

ST. MORITZ, Switzerland (AP) — The International Ski Federation, in seeming reaction to new warnings by International Olympic Committee president Avery Brundage, tightened its anti-commercialism rules Thursday as the world's top alpine skiers prepared to open the racing season.

On the eve of a star-studded women's downhill World Cup race, FIS president Marc Hodler sent word that effective immedjately no trademarks will be allowed on helmets, goggles, gloves or ski garb.

An FIS regulation put into force earlier this year had limited the size of trademarks on skis and boots.

Brundage said this week that "practically all" alpine skiers fail to meet the Olympic eligibility rule. Last-minute spectacular disqualifications of FIS skiers could disrupt the entire alpine program at the Sapporo Olympics less than three months away.

The French Olympic Committee's executive board, in what looked like a defiant gesture Wednesday, approved all French alpine skiers named for Sapporo. A special FIS meeting here Sunday will discuss a project for alternative world championships in France and Norway if Brundage follows through on his warnings.

TRADEMARKS MUST GO

Meanwhile, stationery shops in this resort registered record sales of adhesive tape as skiers rushed to comply by covering the trademarks.

The seven-nation field for the 2.4-kilometre women's downhill on Mt. San Murezzan includes France's Francoise Macchi, Jacqueline Rouvier, and Isabelle Mir, who top the official FIS rankings published Wednesday. World Cup winner Anne-Marie Proell, Annie Famose, another French ace, and Americans Marilyn Cochran and Karen Budge also are competing.

CHAMP TAKES FIRST EVENT

ST. MORITZ, Switzerland (AP) — Defending World Cup champion Anne-Marie Proell of Austria won the St. Moritz White Ribbon women's downhill race, opening the international alpine skiing season today.

She finished more than a second ahead of Francoise Macchi, the top-ranked French downhill specialist, and two other French aces, Jacqueline Rouvier and Isabelle Mir.

Bays, Vic High Post Hoop Wins

Oak Bay and Victoria High scored convincing victories Thursday as the inter-scholastic basketball tournament revived after a seven-year layoff — got under way at Vic High gymnasium.

Oak Bay crushed Royal Roads Military College 64-44 and Vic High Totems tripped Britannia of Vancouver 75-49 in opening games of the three-day, six-team tourney. Port Alberni and Victoria '71 Grads are also participating.

The six teams are split into two groups for the purpose of round-robin elimination play which continues tonight at 7. Winners from each division will meet in the championship final at 8:30 p.m. Saturday following the consolation final at 7 p.m.

Little Change Noted For Island Fisherman

Very little has changed on the fishing scene around Vancouver Island during the past week. The main winter runs of steelhead are still anxiously awaited, trout angling is fair to mediocre and winter spring salmon continue to dominate action in southern Island waters.

Starting with the salmon we find the sheltered waters of Saanich Inlet still teem with a mixed population of grilse, bluebacks, jack springs and winter springs.

Best chances of success occur from Goldstream Island to The Narrows, between Willis Point and Senanus Island, along the Bamberton shore and from Ricky's Roost to The Boulder. But fish well offshore with plenty of weight.

Bill McKay topped area anglers on Wednesday evening with an 18:04-pounder taken in McKenzie Bay on a minnow.

Deep Cove waters are yielding grilse, jacks and blues to the few fishermen venturing out.

Jim Lowrie proved again that Oak Bay can be a productive area this time of the year by landing a 24-pound spring earlier this week while Harry Southin came back Monday with a limit catch of springs up to 17 pounds from Trial Island. Other spots worthy of a try are Discovery Light and the outside of Goat Island.

Bait has lured the majority of salmon along with 21 ounces to one and one-half pounds of weight and 50 to 75 feet of line.

★ ★ ★

Winter springs averaging eight pounds continue to come in from Brotchie Ledge off the Victoria waterfront.

And from Bentinck Island to Becher Bay, as well as along the kelp in Pedder Bay, fishermen have been hauling in winter springs using super-minnow teasers, one pound of weight and approximately 100 feet of line.

Albert Brohman, one of the regulars fishing off Sooke, came back with a 16-pound spring from the vicinity of Secretary Island.

★ ★ ★

Bluebacks and numerous winter springs have been caught in deep waters off Crofton while blues provide the main fare for fishermen working Maple Bay.

Further north on the Island, buzz-bombers going "real deep" in Dodd's Narrows (ie. three to four pounds of weight) are catching winter springs while fishermen in Rainy and Sunshine bays down the Alberni Canal are coming home with the same type of return.

The only other bright spot up-Island is Deep Bay, where fair numbers of coho are being landed.

As far as steelhead are concerned, the only reasonably safe bet at the moment seems to be the Gold River.

Other, but less reliable, spots to try might be the Pumphouse Pool in the Campbell River as well as the Puntlchan and San Juan rivers.

★ ★ ★

NIBBLES: Cottontail rabbits seem to be spreading faster than one can write about them . . . last week we reported them as far North as the Chemainus River basin . . . now word comes in from the fish and wildlife branch that these prolific animals have reached the Nanaimo area . . . conservation officer Dennis Wilders recently collected one in the Hub City vicinity.

No end seems in sight for the dangerous practise of carrying loaded firearms in vehicles . . . out of 22 prosecutions for the month of October on the lower Mainland, eight were for this violation . . . despite repeated warnings, as well as fatal and near-fatal accidents.

Kemp Lake in Sooke, Weston Lake on Salt Spring Island and Fullers Lake near Chemainus were recently restocked with two-inch fingerling trout from the Fraser Valley hatchery near Abbotsford.

For those interested in statistics, 151,650 resident hunters in 1969 bagged an estimated total of 57,035 deer, 15205 moose, 1,498 elk, 1,557 mountain goats, 227 mountain sheep, 854 caribou, 806,793 grouse and 23,631 pheasants.

BASEBALL TRADERS BUSY

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — New York Yankees and Texas Rangers traded the first shot before the crack of dawn and by the time the smoke had cleared there was an army of playing talent swapped Thursday at the winter baseball meetings.

Such illustrious troops as Frank Robinson of Baltimore Orioles and Rich Allen of Los Angeles Dodgers were among 28 players who changed uniforms in eight trades Thursday.

Baltimore manager Earl Weaver said the Orioles were reluctant to trade Robinson previously, although his name had cropped up several times in trade talks in recent years.

Weaver shipped Robinson and pitcher Pete Richert to the Dodgers in a six-player deal.

ORIOLES GET 4

The Orioles received four relative unknowns—pitchers Doyle Alexander and Bobby O'Brien, catcher Sergio Robles and outfielder-first baseman Royle Stillman.

The Dodgers made the pitch for Robinson while parting with the fence-breaking Allen, who moved to Chicago White Sox for pitcher Tommy John and infielder Steve Huntz.

This is the fourth team in four years for Allen, an outfielder-third baseman who hit 234 home runs in eight major league seasons.

"Richie is a wonderful person and a good friend as well," said Tanner.

"The White Sox judge Allen on what he does on the field. I know he's going to make us more exciting next year. He's going to make our good hitters better."

The major leagues, silent Wednesday after dealing 15 players in two days Monday and Tuesday, broke loose Thursday as the Yankees and Texas made a three-man deal before the sun rose.

The Yanks acquired infielder Bernie Allen for pitchers Terry Ley and Gary Jones.

TRADE WITH INDIANS

It was still early morning when the Rangers made a four-for-four deal with Cleveland Indians—trading Ley, Jones, pitcher Denny Riddleberger and outfielder Del Unser for pitchers Rich Hand and Mike Paul, outfielder Roy Foster and catcher Ken Suarez.

These deals followed:

—Texas traded catcher Paul Casanova to Atlanta Braves for catcher Hal King;

—Houston Astros traded first baseman John Mayberry and infielder Dave Grangaard to Kansas City Royals for pitchers Jim York and Lance Clemons;

—Baltimore made the Robinson deal.

—Los Angeles unloaded Allen.

—Chicago White Sox traded infielder Rich McKinney to New York Yankees for pitcher Stan Bahnsen.

—Los Angeles sent catcher Tom Haller to Detroit Tigers for cash and a player to be named at a later date.

The Dodger acquisition of Robinson was the blockbuster, though. The 36-year-old slugger is one of the few men in baseball with more than 500 homers to his credit and is the only player to win the most valuable player award in both the American and National Leagues.

Rugby Meet Here

Shawnigan Lake Boys' School and Claremont Spartans will co-host next season's B.C. high school rugby championship tournament.

The tourney will be expanded from eight to 12 teams and is expected to follow a format similar to the successful B.C. high school soccer championship, held recently in Victoria.

Shawnigan coach Derek Hyde-Lay, given the task of setting up the tourney, said the 12 teams will likely be portioned off into groups of three for preliminary round-robin play on the first day with winners of the four groups meeting in semi-finals and a final on the second day.

Dates of the tourney are yet to be set.

Le Mans to Remain Full 24-Hour Race

LE MANS, France (AP) — Threats to cut the famous 24-hour Le Man Auto race down to as short as six hours were firmly rejected by the organizers here Wednesday.

Making public the rules for the 40th running of the classic next June 10-11, president Jean-Marie Lelievre of the organizing Automobile Club de L'Ouest said it would be "a genuine 24-hour race . . . and certainly not the last."

It will be open to special saloon cars and the circuit will include a new section bypassing a dangerous curve — but adding nine more bends.

Moves have been started both to cut world championship sports car races to six hours or 1,000 kilometres, and to forbid drivers racing for more than six hours in any one event.

Club officials said Le Man would continue outside the championship, if necessary. Briton John Wyer, manager of the world champion Gulf-Porsche Team, said he thought the driver ruling "stood no chance."

"I've heard no support for it," Wyer said.

Top Racing Drivers Seek Improved Fire Precautions

LONDON (AP) — The world's top racing drivers will meet in London this week to demand stepped up fire precautions after allegations that Swiss ace Jo Siffert need not have died.

Siffert, 35, died in the blazing wreckage of his car five weeks ago at Britain's Brand Hatch circuit.

A pathologist told an inquest Friday that his only injury from the crash was a broken leg.

"One can certainly say that if there had been no fire he would not have died," he said.

As it was, no one could get near him for five minutes. Track marshals testified at the inquest that two fire extinguishers failed to work and a third was ineffective.

One of them said that but for these failures he was certain Siffert could have been pulled clear with 20 seconds.

URGE BETTER CARE

The seven-man inquest jury returned a verdict of accidental death and added: "We suggest better supervision of safety and fire precautions."

Louis Stanley, secretary of the Grand Prix Drivers Association, immediately called a meeting of world drivers to be held in London.

He said he wants drivers to insist that every track should have six highspeed fire tenders capable of at least 100 m.p.h.

Emergency lights should be installed on every track, he said, to warn following drivers of fire hazards ahead.

HELICOPTER SUGGESTED

Another suggestion he put forward is that each race should be watched from a fire-fighting helicopter. Tests have shown that a helicopter's blades can fan flames away from a burning car, even into the wind, he said.

Christopher Lowe, a director of the brands Hatch circuit, said safety precautions at the track were in line with rules of the Royal Automobile Club and in some ways were above the minimum. The fire extinguishers had been tested the day before the race, he said.

CHRYSLER DROPS STOCKS

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. announced Wednesday that it will not provide factory support for any stock car racing teams for the 1972 swason.

Chrysler thus ended the successful affiliation it had maintained with several stock car teams, notably that of Richard Petty's National Association of Stock Car Racers championship Plymouth team.

Dodge and Plymouth drivers now hold championships in the five major stock car circuits.

Yachting Pressure on Victoria

Being popular can bring its penalties — especially in terms of plain hard work.

Pacific Northwest yachtsmen, many of whom had their first taste of Victoria's hospitality during the Swiftsure weekend, like what we have — and want more of it.

Pressure toward making Victoria the yachting centre of the coast began to mount when Pacific International Yacht Racing Union officials met recently in Bellingham.

What they envisioned was a whole week of racing, similar to the Cowes Week in England, culminating in the Swiftsure and Juan de Fuca classics.

They concentrated the pressure on the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, long-time Swiftsure host.

Various clubs offered to lend a hand if a Canadian Cowes Week came to fruition, the various class events being "farmed out" to out-of-town clubs.

But the onshore facilities and arrangements that would be needed are equally demanding — and as important in some ways as the racing itself.

While it will be months before any final decision-making can be made, Royal Vic. members have made at least a partial gesture to their out-of-town buddies.

Normally, the PIYA regatta is rotated among the five major clubs in the area. After 1972, when it is the Corinthian Yacht Club's turn as host, this will change, for at least three years.

Royal Vic. will host the regatta in 1973, 1974 and 1975 and what happens during those years may well decide whether Victoria will become a permanent Mecca for yachtsmen with a yen for competition.

Members of the Turkey Head Sailing Association will be pacing it out again this Sunday in waters off Oak Bay. Two races are scheduled, the first starting at 10 a.m. and the next at 1:30 p.m.

Also racing this weekend will be Royal Vic. keel boats. They start at 11 a.m. Sunday, racing an 11-mile course off Sidney.

There were 27 boats on the start line last Sunday when members of the Canoe Bay Sailing Club sailed their last race until early February.

Peter White's White Squall was the over-all winner in winds which ran the gamut from southerly, westerly, nor'easterly to, finally, nor'westerly.

After her came Miles Dighton's Obsession, Don Evans' If, Jack Smith's Reality and Bud Peetz's Saki.

Royal Vic. frostbiters will be out for another session of dinghy racing in Cadboro Bay, starting at 1:30 p.m.

Nancy Lovett was again the over-all winner in El Toro competition last Saturday, beating out Tara Kenning, Brian Robertson, Beatrice Martin and Cathy Williams.

In Davissons, it was Humphrey Golby, followed by Ron Mack, Peter Townshend, Ted Bowers and Sybil Lees.

Fireball winner was Sheena Smith, Robbie Grundison and Brian O'Brien placed second and third.

Doug Gray and Kaspar Schibli tied for first spot in X-class dinghy racing. Tied for third place were Walter Roots and Charles Simpson.

★ ★ ★

Although they didn't come home with top honors, a Royal Vic. team of juniors earned a handsome third place when seven clubs competed for the Howe Sound junior championship at West Vancouver last weekend.

The Seattle Yacht Club contingent came first, followed by the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club team.

Racing under the Royal Vic. colors were Doug and Kathy Kidd, Tony Rose and Howard Peet, Gerry Trueman and Steve Titus, Andrew Burton and Henry Pejril.

SHORT TACKS — Thetis Lake has been chosen for a paddling and canoeing session by members of the Victoria Canoe Club Sunday. Things get under way at 1:30 p.m. with Dan Johnstone acting as co-ordinator. On Thursday party togs will be the rig-of-the-day for the club's Christmas party, to be held at Goodacre Towers.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Consistent rolling enabled Jack Fisher to top men's ten-pin section and earn weekly award in Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest for first time. Jack, set pace for male trundlers competing in league play on southern Vancouver Island lanes as he rattled pins for 223-192-217—632 series in Wednesday Commercial League at Mayfair Lanes to capture honors in eighth week of ninth annual event.

Council Harmony Outdoes Discord

CHEMAINUS — Ald. Tom Burge admitted Wednesday night the North Cowichan election was remarkable for its lack of controversial issues, but considers he and his council colleagues have "worked harmoniously . . . with the people who foot the bill."

Burge was speaking Wednesday evening to an all-candidate meeting of the Chemainus Ratepayers' and Citizens' Association.

"I fully believe the mayor and council have been given good stable government in the last two years," he told the small audience." I would say that, even if I wasn't on council myself. Every member has been given a pretty heavy work-load . . . and has got on with the job."

Burge, who works at Crofton pulp and paper mill, has been on council for four years.

As well as serving on the fire department committee, he has been on the pollution control committee.

"It has not been an easy committee," he noted.

RECREATION NEEDS

Burge is one of six candidates running for the three two-year aldermanic seats in the Dec. 11 election.

Ald. Margaret Robertson, on council for six years, said she would like to look into the recreational needs of senior citizens.

Mrs. Robertson said now that the young are being taken care of so well with the Fuller's Lake arena, upgraded soccer fields, lifeguards at all beaches and many other endeavors, "it is time we took a look to see what the senior citizens need."

Mrs. Robertson was one of North Cowichan's representatives on the Cowichan Valley Regional Board this past year.

Ron McKinnon, a B.C. Telephone employee, said he has spent the past 18 months studying the administration and other aspects of the municipality. He would like to see action taken in the treatment of sewage and against the Chemainus mill for its flyash problem.

Pulp mill worker Peter Idema says his main platform is amalgamation, adding that there can be no proper planning with smaller communities.

Henry Bepple, another pulp mill worker, said he will take a close look at all municipal expenses and work for better recreational facilities.

Dave Haywood, chairman of the Cowichan School Board and personnel manager at Crofton Pulp Mill, expressed his concern over the increasing school and health and welfare taxes. He said he would like to serve on the regional board.

Candidates for one two-year seat are retired Archie Stevenson; cab driver Perry Ross; and sporting good wholesaler Bob Evans.

$200,000 for Hospitals

The provincial government has authorized the expenditure of an additional $200,000 to pay for expansion of Clearwater hospital.

A cabinet order released Thursday said the Thompson-Nicola regional hospital district may raise the money without going to the taxpayers for approval.

Choked Port Blocking Aid

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian shipments of wheat to East Pakistan have run into a distribution bottleneck at the port of Chittagong, the Commons external affairs committee was told Thursday.

Three of four ships carrying the $7 million worth of wheat arrived in the Bay of Bengal port in late October and early November.

But, said Paul Gerin-Lajoie, president of the Canadian International Development agency, none had cleared Chittagong for shipment to the interior according to his information.

The fourth ship has been diverted to Singapore, where arrangements have been made to put its contents in storage, Neil Overend, CIDA's director of programming for Asia, told the committee.

Canada has earmarked its entire 1971-72 food aid allotment for Pakistan to the eastern region of the country, where civil war had disrupted normal supplies in some regions.

Gerin-Lajoie headed a seven-man Canadian mission to Pakistan and India Oct. 24 to Nov. 4, to study the need of the millions of East Pakistani refugees who have fled to India and of the displaced people still in East Pakistan.

After the mission returned, Canadian aid for the refugees was raised to $22 million from $4 million.

Gerin-Lajoie, in a report to External Affairs Minister Sharp which was released to committee members, offered "highest praise" to the Indian government for its efforts on behalf of the refugees.

However, it criticized a "lack of forward planning" by New Delhi, which insists that administration of the massive effort remain entirely in Indian hands.

Dealing with a huge discrepancy between refugee figures as given by Pakistan and India, Gerin-Lajoie said India's estimate of some nine million refugees on its soil is reasonably accurate.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A fit of anger during a period of depression proved costly in court for Oswald Underwood Thursday.

Underwood, 18, of 293 Atkins Road, pleaded guilty to mischief. Court was told that the accused smashed a window at Jean's Hobbies Hutch Ltd., 554 Johnson, about 11 p.m. Nov. 24.

"How did that help your depression?" Judge William Ostler asked Underwood, who said he was depressed.

"It didn't," the accused answered.

Underwood suffered cuts to his hands from broken glass that required stitches.

Ostler gave the man a nominal one day in jail and a fine of $100. In addition, he ordered Underwood to pay $403 damages, including $225 to replace the window.

★ ★ ★

Leo Gauthier, 53, of 550 Johnson, was found guilty of obtaining food by fraud and fined $50.

Evidence revealed that the accused went to a restaurant at 1313 Douglas and ordered a meal, telling the waitress he had money to pay Nov. 25.

The accused tried to leave without paying for the $2.65 bill.

★ ★ ★

Carol E. Carr, 27, of 1851 Crescent, was given a suspended sentence and placed on a six-month probation when she pleaded guilty to stealing a purse from Simpsons-Sears department store Nov. 11.

Ostler acknowledged the testimony of the accused's character in the community.

The judge said the accused made "substantial contributions" to the community and there are times "this carries the day concerning sentence."

★ ★ ★

Larry H. Hedch, 23, of Ontario, was fined $250 when he pleaded guilty to driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 per cent.

Court was told that Hedch was stopped by police after driving his vehicle with the lights off on Esquimalt Road about 12:45 a.m. Thursday.

The accused had a breathalyzer reading of .10 per cent at the time.

★ ★ ★

Jeffery Lynn Baker, 20, of Work Point Barracks, was fined $350 by Judge E. F. N. Robinson for impaired driving. He was prohibited from driving for three months.

★ ★ ★

James E. Olsuik, 44, of 757 Lily, was fined $350 for impaired driving and prohibited from driving four months except when working.

Assailant Walks Out After Drinker Killed

VANCOUVER — A man was shot to death Thursday night as he sat at a crowded table in a downtown beer parlor.

Patrons at the hotel saw a man draw a sawed-off shotgun from a paper bag and shoot his victim at point blank range, then walk from the building.

Police said both men were part of the same group at one of the beer parlor tables.

The unidentified victim was dead on arrival at hospital.

Sentencing Delayed

VANCOUVER — Sentencing of former Vancouver assistant city prosecutor James Wilson, 35, convicted of stealing $34,000 from the estate of a Surrey man, was adjourned until Dec. 9 in county court.

Wilson was convicted Nov. 17 of stealing the money from the estate of the late husband of Mrs. Loretta Malutka.

Heroin Seller Held

VANCOUVER — Bail was set at $55,000 cash Thursday for a Vancouver restaurant operator accused of selling drugs valued on the illicit market at $200,000 to an undercover RCMP officer and a U.S. Narcotics Bureau agent.

Charged with trafficking in heroin between Sept. 14 and Dec. 2 — the time the two officers worked undercover as kingpin drug buyers — is Tom Fung, 45.

Crown prosecutor P. W. Halprin asked that Fung be denied bail as the undercover agent from the U.S. had his life threatened during his dealings with a suspected drug supplier.

Marketing Urged

NEW WESTMINSTER — Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford said Thursday money the federal government plans to spend on a farm development program would be better spent on market research.

Shelford said Ottawa has allocated only $26 million for the development program, "just a drop in the bucket considering that they spent $450 million on one area of Quebec for this type of work and there is still nearly as much poverty there as at the start of the program."

Workers End Strike

VANCOUVER — City electrical workers voted Thursday night to accept a wage offer and bring to an end a strike that started Wednesday.

Terms of the offer were not made public but it was understood to be a 7.9-per-cent wage increase in each year of a two-year pact.

Bank Deposits Down

OTTAWA (CP) — A sharp drop in the publicly-held money supply was recorded in Bank of Canada statistics for the week ended Nov. 24, reflecting the withdrawal of bank deposits to buy Canada Savings Bonds.

The total of cash in circulation and bank deposits was $34.4 billion, down more than $1 billion for the week. Federal government deposits in the chartered banks rose by almost the same amount.

The government cut off sale of this year's series of Canada Savings Bonds at the end of last week. While some transactions may still be reported in the weekly statistics, nearly $2.5 billion of the new bonds were sold this year.

Interest rates remained generally steady, the central bank's report showed. Three-month treasury bills auctioned Thursday brought bids pushing the effective yield up to 3.37 per cent a year from 3.24 last week and 3.34 a week earlier.

The average yield on long-term federal government bonds at prevailing market prices was down to 6.54 per cent from 6.56 last week and 6.68 a week earlier.

IT'S A RUM GO FOR THE MATELOT

HALIFAX (CP)—The old navy tradition of the rum ration will be discontinued by March 31, 1972, it was reliably learned here today, but all messes will have wine, spirits and beer available for all hands.

The decision by Defence Minister Macdonald follows similar steps by the Royal Navy in Britain more than a year ago.

Both navies had followed the tradition of a daily issue of one part overproof rum to two parts water, though a cola was used as mix in the Canadian Navy.

No Foul Play

WILLIAMS LAKE (CP) — RCMP Wednesday called off the search for Leonard Grassie of Williams Lake, who was reported missing while on a hunting trip 40 miles north of here.

Searchers found Grassie's rifle and hunting knife concealed in the bush and RCMP said they believe he left the area of his own accord.

Farmhouse Fire Death Toll 11

HAMMOND, Ont. (CP) — Fire Thursday destroyed a two-storey farmhouse and left a man, a woman and nine children dead.

Two young boys escaped the blaze and fled to a neighboring farm. They are in fair condition in an Ottawa hospital suffering from burns.

The dead are Claude Herbert, 33, Denise Mailly, 34, and nine children. They are Mr. Herbert's sons, Yves, 5, and Chantel, 7, and Mrs. Mailley's children, Jean, 14, Linda, 13, Claudette, 10, Suzanne, 9, Marie, 8, Andre, 6, and Jean Claude, 4.

Police combing the ruins recovered the body of a small male Thursday before darkness and below-freezing temperatures halted the search for the night.

Christian Mailly, 12, and his brother Richard, 11, saved themselves by running to a neighboring farm in zero temperatures.

The fire had engulfed the house by the time help arrived. The flames destroyed telephone lines and firemen had to be summoned by car. When they arrived, the house had burned almost to the foundations.

The smoldering wreckage hindered attempts to remove the bodies for several hours.

The fire apparently broke out about 2:30 a.m. and raced through the structure before help could arrive.

The family had moved to the house about a month ago in order to have more room.

Hammond is about 25 miles east of Ottawa.

Viet Cong Announce 3-Day Ceasefires

SAIGON (AP) — The Viet Cong radio today proclaimed three-day ceasefires in Vietnam for Christmas and New Year's and a four-day ceasefire for the Tet lunar new year holiday in mid-February.

The southern allies also are expected to declare ceasefires, but for shorter periods, and to withhold the announcements until just before the holidays for security reasons.

The South Vietnamese government sent a squadron of helicopters to Cambodia today to help extricate retreating Cambodian forces on the northeastern front.

Military sources in Saigon said 24 to 30 helicopters plus six to eight escorting gunships were airlifting the Cambodians in their withdrawal to safer defensive positions.

The Cambodians, under heavy North Vietnamese attacks, abandoned two towns this week in the worst setback for the Phnom Penh government in the 20 months of the Cambodian war.

The Cambodian command tried to play down the reverse, issuing a communique which said that its forces had withdrawn from the towns of Baray and Kompong Thmar to "reorganize defensive positions."

Baray is 60 miles northeast of Phnom Penh and Kompong Thmar is six miles north of Baray.

Abortion, Genocide Compared

By ANN DUNSMUIR
Times Staff

Dr. Heather Morris, a Toronto obstetrician and gynecologist, compared advocates of legal abortion to those Germans who supported Hitler's program of mass genocide.

Dr. Morris is on the staff of the Women's College Hospital, Toronto, and a member of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists of Great Britain.

She spoke Thursday at noon to a small audience in the Student Union Building at the University of Victoria. Earlier in the day she had addressed student nurses at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Dr. Morris said she was denied a chance to speak to the nurses at "your hospital which is doing all the abortions."

Miss Mary Irving, director of the school of nursing at Royal Jubilee Hospital, said Birthright, the local group sponsoring Dr. Morris, had contacted her about a month ago.

Miss Irving said the school's administration had considered the request and decided it would not be fair to give only one side of the picture.

Matter of Time

"It was a matter of time," Miss Irving said. "If we let her speak we felt we should give the pro-abortion group equal time. There just wasn't enough time available in the lecture block."

Dr. Morris said the "whole issue of abortion boils down to one fact—is what grows within the mother human life?

"If you think it is non-human then there is no reason for concern," she said.

"If it is human then abortion kills a human being."

She believes that denying the humanity of a developing fetus so that its life can be terminated at "the whim of the mother" endangers the rights of Canadians.

"That is how Hitler began his program of genocide," Dr. Morris said. "He started by branding certain minority groups as non-human. He began with imbeciles and senile old people and went on to the Jews."

"The Canadian Bill of Rights states that there exists and shall continue to exist the fundamental right to life, liberty and security of person and property," she said.

Dr. Morris thinks it is the duty of parliament to protect the developing baby under the Bill of Rights. "No one pleads for the poor baby before the abortion committee," she said.

Dr. Morris pointed out that a medical conference in 1967 sponsored by the Kennedy Foundation was asked to determine at what point abortion destroyed a human life.

The doctors stated that they could find no point in time between conception and birth at which they could say a human life was not present.

Dr. Morris played the heart beat of a 10-week-old fetus. "The baby is fully conscious," she said. "At eight weeks it responds to sound, light, touch and pain."

She said the usual method of abortion before the 14th week of pregnancy was either curretage or suction. "The baby is torn to pieces and you can see the little arms and legs go down the tubing," she said. "Remember that this little baby is fully sensitive to pain."

Dr. Morris described the period up to the 14th week of pregnancy as the safe period for abortion. "In spite of this there is still danger to the mother," she said.

She listed some of the dangers such as hemorrhage, infection, perforation of the womb and sterility. "I know three teenagers who had to have a hysterectomy (removal of the uterus) and they had the best doctors in the province," Dr. Morris said.

"These are the short term complications," she said. "In Japan where they have had time to study long-term complications they have found a 700-per-cent rise in the number of ectopic pregnancies among women who have had abortions compared to those who have never had an abortion."

She explained that in an ectopic pregnancy the baby develops in the fallopian tube. The tube ruptures and the result is "massive internal bleeding."

Dr. Morris said the same Japanese study showed that among women who had abortions 30 to 40 per cent of their subsequent pregnancies ended in spontaneous abortion or miscarriage.

"This means a teenager who has an abortion now may never be able to have a child," Dr. Morris said.

She described the methods used for abortions after the "safe" 14-week period.

Saline Solution Used

The methods are the injection of a saline solution into the amniotic fluid surrounding the baby or hysterotomy, the surgical removal of the fetus by means of an abdominal incision.

In the first method the baby swallows the salt solution and dies. Shortly afterwards the mother goes into labor and delivers a dead baby. "They are called candy apple babies," Dr. Morris said. "They look red and raw because all the skin has been burnt off by the solution. They don't always die. One is alive in New York and has been adopted."

Dr. Morris said that all babies aborted by hysterotomy are removed alive. "Sometimes it takes them half an hour to die," she said.

"We used to consider human life beyond price," Dr. Morris said. "Now we are saying a human life is not worth six months out of school or financial embarrassment."

"When you consider abortion you must weigh everything against the killing of a human life," she said.

"If anything outweighs it then I feel sorry for you. Someone may some day put a price tag on your life."

Buy Knowledge With 'Educredit' Card

● Following is a review of School is Dead: Alternatives in Education, By Everett Reimer, Doubleday, $5.95. The review was done for the Washington Post by Ronald Gross, poet, teacher and author.

"My grandmother wanted me to have an education, so she kept me out of school." Margaret Mead's paradox, thrust into current educational debate by the "deschoolers," has thrown serious educators on the defensive.

Ivan Illich, John Paul Goodman and others charge that schools and colleges are not merely doing everything wrong (by now a comfortably familiar theme), but that they are wrong. Not merely manglers of an ideal, but rotten to the core; whited sepulchers that oppress and degrade the people in them, while ruthlessly condemning those outside as "drop-outs."

At a seminar last year, Ivan Illich turned to me and said, "I'm the salesman; Reimer's the thinker." Now, on the heels of Illich's "Deschooling Society," comes Reimer's report on the 15-year-long conversation between him and Illich, conducted mostly at the Centre for Intercultural Documentation in Cuernavaca, Mexico, which has made Cidoc a mecca for American school reformers over the past three years.

"School is Dead" and "Deschooling Society" indict formal education on the same grounds, and offer essentially the same suggestions for an alternative pattern of education. But Reimer's exposition is less compressed, more accessible, and more engaging. Reading both books gives you the ideas stereophonically, as it were — but if you read only one, read Reimer.

The deschooler's case against the schools rests on several foundations: inequity, inefficiency, and indoctrination.

Schools are inequitable because, in the words of the Italian school boys of Barbiano, they are "a war against the poor." They always and everwhere advance the advantaged. As David Reisman has noted, the iron law of education seems to be "the more, the more": the more you have, the more you are likely to get. At the same time, schools reject the poor (except for skimming off the top — raking the ashes, in Jefferson's phrase — and coopting them into the elite), "boy — that's what they'll call you for the rest of your life, if you don't finish high school." That's what we tell poor kids — and then usually present them with a school program which assures their failure.

Schools Inefficient

Schools are inefficient because they try to do so many contradictory jobs — child custody, indoctrination, selection for advanced education and for occupations, promoting learning — that the last-named is rarely achieved. Rather, the reverse: the attempt to control, shape, and coerce other kinds of behavior makes school the worst possible place to learn what schools are supposedly teaching.

What is to be done? The Illich-Reimer scheme is to "disestablish" schooling: repeal compulsory education laws, provide constitutional guarantees against discrimination on the basis of possession of a high school or college diploma or advanced degree, roll back public financing of schools, and vest the money available for education in each citizen through an educredit card (far more sweeping than the voucher plan) which could be used at any time in his life, to purchase whatever educational experiences he wants.

But where would people spend their money? Reimer sketches for "networks" which he believes would give people access to anything they might want or need to know. One is a vastly enriched, decentralized, demoreratized library providing genuine access not only to books but to information in all media, to tools, machines, games, natural preserves, and all other specifically educational parts of the environment. Another would enable people to link up with people who know what they want to know, or can do what they want to do, and are willing to share their competence. A third would put learners in touch with other learners engaged in the same pursuit. A fourth would make available counselling on planning one's own education — but more the way a travel agent helps you plan a trip than the way a teacher tells you what to study.

What do people really need to learn? Contrasted with what they now learn in schools and colleges, people would learn that they, not the professional educators, are the architects of their own learning and growth. They would learn that education is a continuous process inextricably related to what they want to do with their lives, rather than a limited experience in youth when one masters certain arcane subjects at the determination of one's elders.

What Reimer and Illich are talking about, in the end, is a change of consciousness, Reimer puts it forthrightly:

"The choice ultimately is between two completely different styles of life. One is egalitarian, pluralistic, and relatively sparse in the kinds of products and services it provides. People have to do things for themselves, but have time and freedom to do what they want. The other kind of life is based on a unified hierarchy of privilege maintained by international, interclass, and interpersonal competition." The kinds of competition are limited and highly structured, but the prizes are realatively glamorous, at least on the surface."

Won't Shrivel Up

Reimer recognizes that schools and schooling are not going to shrivel up and blow away in five years, as Illich has suggested.

Rather than a showdown between the deschoolers and those who still seek radical reform of schools, I sense that we are involved today in a various, halting, impulsive, sometimes violent groping toward better ways of learning, growing and developing our potentials. One hopes that through the gradual weakening of the constraints of schooling we will so loosen its fabric, and so strengthen the opportunities to learn from other sources, that it will become impossible to separate learning from life, student and teacher from friends learning together. For this we need a real flowering of other options, other avenues to growing up, other institutions in which to become more human.

New Poison Study Cites Time, Place

OTTAWA (CP) — Don't let your child become a poisoning statistic this year, says the education service of the federal food and drug directorate in its publication Dispatch.

In 1969, there were more than 47,000 poisonings, accidental ingestions and contacts reported by 291 poison control centres across Canada. Children under 5 years of age accounted for almost 70 per cent of cases recorded.

"Where location was indicated, most of these incidents occurred in the kitchen between the hours of four and six in the evening," the publication says. "Children are hungry at this time and mothers may be unaware of what the youngsters are doing when they are busy preparing a meal.

"In the mornings, the bedroom and bathroom are areas where frequent poisonings and accidental ingestions occur because people leave medication on night tables, bureaus and vanity tops.

"During the day, while mothers are doing their household cleaning tasks, they are often interrupted by a ringing telephone or doorbell and they leave open bottles of furniture polish, drain cleaner or liquid bleach where curious little children easily find them."

Poison control centres in Canada in 1969 reported 1,090 incidents of ingestion of children's headache pills, the majority of cases involving children aged 2 and 3.

To reduce the probability of death or serious illness from such accidents, the food and drug directorate set new regulations in March, 1970, for the packaging of children's headache tablets.

Manufacturers now are required to package this product in quantities not larger than 24 tablets of 1¼-grain strength.

Thus a child could only ingest 30 grains by eating the contents of one bottle, an amount not considered likely to cause fatal consequences when eaten by a child of 2 or 3 years although the child could become quite ill.

Children often get into medicines other than headache tablets, including tranquillizers, analgesics and sleeping capsules.

"Take every precaution when you have small children in your home and ask your pharmacist to dispense prescriptions for tablets or capsules in a vial with a child-resistant closure," the article says.

"These closures require a certain amount of manual dexterity and strength which is not usually present in children up to the age of 4 or 5 years."

The best protection, however, was to keep potentially dangerous items out of reach of children, preferably in a locked storage cupboard.

The article urges parents to make sure that products used outside such as gasoline, pesticides and fertilizers are also kept away from children.

Surgery for Siamese Twins

EDMONTON (CP) — An operation to separate month-old Siamese twin girls will be performed "near Christmas or the New Year," the attending pediatrician said this week.

Chances are "very good indeed" that the girls, Cynthia and Christine, who are joined from the lower chest to the abdomen, will survive the operation and begin normal lives, he said in an interview.

The surgical team will number about 20 — including two general surgeons, two thoracic surgeons, a plastic surgeon, two anesthetists, and a number of supporting surgeons, physicians and nurses.

Members of the team have chosen to remain anonymous.

"We prefer to be regarded as a team working together, rather than a group of individuals," he said.

Technicians and mechanics now are preparing a special operating table which will be constructed so the twins can lie in their present position — face-to-face — while they are being separated. Once separated, each will be turned on its back and the tables will divide with each baby rolled to its own team of doctors where the remainder of the operation will be performed.

Christine and Cynthia have grown to a combined weight of 14 pounds, 4½ ounces. They were 10 pounds, six ounces at birth, Oct. 28.

City Promises $900 To Self Help Society

The Victoria Self Help Society was promised $900 Thursday from city council's finance committee.

Appearing before the committee, spokesmen said they need a demonstration of support from the city before the provincial and federal governments will aid the group.

The group's work is to find part time employment for mothers receiving welfare payments.

The director, Reg Clarkson, told committee he has been group and is out $600 of his own money.

The $900 promised by the city is its part of an interworking for nothing for the municipally shared portion of about $8,500 the group needs to operate. Other money would be granted under the Canada Assistance Act.

Patients Need Loving Care

NEW YORK (UPI) — Is the tender loving care aspects of nursing obsolete? "Absolutely not," says a registered nurse at a metropolitan hospital. Charlotte Walker says the sophisticated equipment patients face in the modern hospital makes them even more tense — and in need of tender loving care. Miss Walker was a nurse at New York's Bellevue Hospital before becoming director of nursing at Hackensack Hospital in New Jersey. "The nurse," she says, "provides the human touch."

'Flu' Drug on Way . . . Don't Expect Magic

NEW YORK (UPI) — Dr. George Gee Jackson finds the scientific prospect for really effective anti-virus drugs in general and anti-influenza drugs in particular to be quite good.

That's hopeful for future influenza seasons but not for people who come down with flu this winter. As of now, no drugs for curing the flu, once caught, exist in practical form.

The improved prospect is relatively new. As Jackson remarked, "for many years virologists held out little hope for development of a specifically anti-influenzal therapy or, for that matter, of specific anti-viral agents of any kind."

Viruses become so intimately a part of the body cells they infect, it seemed impossible to attack them without attacking their hosts. But now, Jackson said, Virology knows of five "mechanisms" for interfering with viral multiplication without undue harm to cells.

Optimism Founded

The quest is for drugs which do the trick readily against a wide range of infectious viruses. For each of the five theoretic "mechanisms" there now is an experimental drug or drugs of varying promise in varying stages of development. Hence the optimism of Jackson, an authority on infectious diseases and a professor of medicine at the University of Illinois.

One "mechanism" is to prevent viruses from synthesizing their nucleic acids. Another is to mess up the assembling of proteins derived from those acids into complete viruses. A third is to inhibit the ability of viruses to enter body cells. The remaining "mechanisms" are to inactivate viruses and to increase the resistance of cells to invasion.

Physicians Warned

Jackson warned physicians against looking forward to a "magic anti-viral bullet." The very variety of possible approaches means a tedious development of a series of anti-viral drugs, each with a comparatively limited range of activity, he wrote in the technical journal, "Hospital Practice."

One of the drugs is available to all doctors by prescription. In Jackson's opinion doctors are not making enough use of it because they are "waiting for the ideal drug."

It is Amantadine, a synthetic, which seems to prevent "A" type influenza viruses, including the Hong Kong variant, from entering body cells, but is not at all effective against the "B" type.

Another limitation is that it must be present in the body at the time of virus challenge. This means its chief value is that of a preventive of "A" influenza. Nevertheless, Jackson said, more use of it in the aged and debilitated in times of "A" epidemics would "increase our understanding of influenza" and hasten the coming of ideal drugs.

'I Do' Without Priest

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Roman Catholics in some areas will be able to say their "I do's" without need of a priest to seal the marriage union, Vatican sources said Thursday.

The said Pope Paul VI will issue a new set of regulations setting down conditions by which Catholics can be properly married in the eyes of their church even if no priest officiated at the wedding.

The rules will be applied mainly in clergy-starved regions to make sure that all Catholics have the opportunity to be married according to church law, the sources added.

The regulations would not constitute a change in Catholic dogma. Even now, the church teaches that marriage is a sacrament conferred by each partner on the other. The priest officiates and acts as witness but does not confer the sacrament.

Catholics believe a sacrament to be a visible sign of Divine favor which gives sanctity to the soul of the person who received it.

Once the new regulations come into effect, the source said, deacons, nuns or even lay people will be authorized to officiate at wedding services where priests are not available.

They said the regulations are among the first fruits of the international Synod of bishops here last October, which was lukewarm toward bringing married men into the clergy to solve a desperate shortage of priests in some countries. Several bishops argued that the crisis could be met by turning over to religious men and women or to the laity many of the jobs now done by priests. Officiating at weddings would be one such job.

Couples marrying without a priest would be required to have the wedding properly witnessed and notified to ecclesisstical authorities. Such a marriage would be considered indissoluble.

Vasectomy Favored By Working Man

TORONTO (CP) — A study of 3,200 sterilization operations in Alberta reveals that fewer male welfare recipients are undergoing the operations than men who work for a living.

The study was conducted by Dr. E. S. Livingstone of Calgary and is reported in the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

Dr. Livingstone said that long-term welfare cases were conspicuous by their absence in figures compiled on vasectomy operations. The men ranged from 21 to 75 years of age.

Dr. Livingstone said the operation is becoming most popular among men who hear of it from their workmates.

"For example, as many as 30 to 40 per cent of a group of firemen have been vasectonlized and there is one station where all the men have undergone the operation."

The operation is usually performed under local anesthetic in a doctor's office or hospital out-patient department.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Forecast for Saturday, Dec. 4, 1971.

By SIDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Domestic tranquillity may be temporarily shattered. What you had taken for granted changes. Mate or partner acts in unorthodox manner. This need not be adverse. Instead, it could stimulate and challenge.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pacing is of special importance. Don't spread efforts over too wide an area. Finish what you start. Relative who is inpatient would best be ignored — in polite way. Important call is due.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Conserve funds; protect assets. Steer clear of speculative schemes. New approach to security seems necessary. Be open to fresh approach. Obstacle of progress soon will be lifted. Be confident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Investment procedure changes — but works in your favor. Family member may be obstinate. Heed your own counsel. Circumstances favor your efforts. You gain added insights. Be aware of property values.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A contract or other document, which has been hidden or lost, makes reappearance. Study causes, reasons. Be aware of various implications. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Check alternatives.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't mix friendship and money. Be specific — and practical. Some barriers come down — but others replace them. Realize no one is going to hand you anything on proverbial silver platter.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may have your own ideas about policies, decisions at executive level — but now is not the time to push them. Wait. There are some significant factors yet to come to light. You will perceive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Shakeup occurs where your personal organization is concerned. Applies also to home and family. Be aware of long-range implications. Not wise to take situations, persons for granted.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ideas, concepts, plans may appear now to be jellylike. They are shaky. Be perceptive enough to separate the real from wishful thinking. Many now offer blandishments. Reject them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Future is brighter than might now be apparent. Key is to realize this and adhere to game plan. Means don't lose sight of ultimate goal. Permit opposition to reveal plans. Play waiting game.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Finish rather than initiate projects. Attend to basic chores. Take nothing for granted. Long-range plans subject to sudden change. Your own philosophical concepts undergo revision. Be open to truth.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emotions, actions are intensified. Nothing now is halfway — all the way or nothing. Specifically, loved one and money requirements may conflict. Stress creative approach. And don't brood about past.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are frank, forthright — you usually come to point and get to heart of matter. Some don't appreciate this — but it is your way and you should adhere to it. If single, marriage is not far away.

dear abby

Consult a Surgeon For This Question

DEAR ABBY: I am seriously considering having a face-lift. I am 45 years old and have crow's-feet around my eyes and a few wrinkles around my upper lip.

Would I have to be hospitalized for this type of operation: And if so, for how long? Also, how long does a face-lift usually last?

I have two children. My husband has told me repeatedly that he doesn't love me, and that as soon as the youngest (who is now in the 10th grade) graduates from high school he is leaving me.

Please answer me because I want to look my best when he leaves. Thanking you in advance, I remain, Very truly yours—"G."

DEAR "G": Make an appointment with a reputable plastic surgeon and ask him in person. It depends upon the doctor, this method of operation, and your face. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: It all started when a woman I knew, only slightly showed up at a country club dinner party wearing a dress exactly like the one I was wearing (May I add, it was a very expensive dress?)

When we saw each other, I laughed and said, "Well, it just proves that we both have good taste."

She didn't laugh, however. Instead she appeared to be very much embarrassed and ill at ease, and within a matter of minutes she had disappeared. The next time I saw her she was wearing a different dress! Would you believe this foolish woman had actually rushed home and changed her dress?

How would you have felt had you been in my place? Insulted? Or relieved?—G.C.

DEAR G.C.: Neither I'd have felt a little sorry for a woman who placed so much importance on what she had on her back.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "Big Dilemma": Yes, you should express sympathy to the family of your friend who took his own life. Make no reference to the circumstances, but be assured they would be far more hurt were none of his friends to send their condolences.

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply enclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

Vitamin E Value Questioned

WASHINGTON (WP) — Large doses of Vitamin E, if you are to believe numerous recent articles for physicians as well as laymen, are valuable in preventing, treating, or curing nocturnal leg cramps. They also reportedly will do the same for sterility, impotence and habitual miscarriages, diabetes, and diseases of the heart and blood vessels.

As if this isn't enough, supplementary amounts of Vitamin E — again if you accept the claims — retard the aging process and hasten the healing of wounds and burns.

You ought to swallow all of this with a big dose of salt, says the medical letter, a non-profit publication for physicians that evaluates medicines and therapies.

"Except for a Vitamin E deficiency associated with hemolytic type of anemia (in which red blood cells are destroyed) that may occasionally occur in small, premature infants, supplements of the vitamin have no established value in preventing or treating any common human disorder," the publication said in this week's issue.

The claims that it will do more "are generally based on uncontrolled trials, on clinical impression, or on extrapolation to man of the results of studies in which Vitamin E deficiency was induced in experimental animals," the medical letter said.

At the same time, authorities such as the food and nutrition board of the National Research Council do consider Vitamin E to be an essential nutrient.

But in adults, the medical letter said, the point at which a deficiency of Vitamin E occurs is not "well-defined," and, consequently, "the guidelines for daily requirements are necessarily vague."

The body's need for Vitamin E is increased by foods containing large amounts of unsaturated fatty acids, such as liquid vegetable oils and fish. Other vegetable oils, especially cottonseed oil, and whole-grain food products, are themselves rich sources of the vitamin, however.

The medical letter said that some manufacturers add Vitamin E to multivitamin preparations, and other products are nothing but Vitamin E (Aquasil E, Eprolin, Tocopherex).

The publication found no evidence of toxic effects, even in users who take large doses for months on end.

SOUND OF MUSIC is heard for the first time by 7-year-old Robert Williams and 7-year-old Todd Aynes, both deaf from birth. With their hands on the throat of famed Metropolitan Opera soprano Elinor Ross, who visited and sang for the pupils of the New York League for the Hard of Hearing this week, the boys hear a song for the first time in their lives.

'Banned' Toy Burns Boy, 6

OTTAWA (CP) — A five-cent party novelty, banned from sale since January, exploded in the hand of a six-year-old boy this week.

Terry Lammeren, who received a burned hand, had purchased the "Dragon Party Popper" 15 minutes earlier, thinking it contained candy treats, he said.

A spokesman for the federal energy department expressed surprise when told of the child's injury. The two-inch-tall plastic bottles, when fired by a pullcord, blast flame and paper streamers out the bottom. They have been banned from sale nearly a year.

E. J. Fraser, chief of the department's explosive division said he "had no idea these things were still on the market."

Last year the energy department, responsible for all explosive products, subjected the Taiwanese-made novelties to extensive testing and found widely-varying powder charges, all of which were over the approved limit.

Some had charged five times the authorized maximum and, if detonated near someone's head, could cause eye or ear damage.

When advised of the accident, the store's owner said he would not sell any more. He was unaware, he said, that their sale was illegal.

Mr. Fraser later told the company it was obligated to supply the energy department with some of the poppers and would have to stop distributing them. The company complied, he said.

Mr. Fraser said he was unhappy to learn that some of the devices were still in store stocks or distributor warehouses.

St. Joan's Vision From Upset Stomach?

LONDON (UPI) — Most of the visions for which St. Joan of Arc was burned at the stake probably were the result of an unusual mental ability and in some case an upset stomach, a British psychiatrist said today.

Dr. F. E. Kenyon, of the Wanneford Hospital in Oxford, said the 15th century martyr's visions of saints and other figures may have been "a well-documented case of eidetic imagery."

"This is a rather concrete preverbal type of ability occurring mostly in children and young adolescents," he wrote in the medical journal, The Practitioners.

"It can persist for long periods and it's projected externally by the observer," he wrote. "If a person has such an image before her, she will turn her eyes to the relevant spot if asked to report on a relevant detail."

Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary defines the word eidetic as "of or relating to voluntarily producible visual images, having almost photographic accuracy." This, said Kenyon, was almost certainly the case with Joan, burned at the stage in 1431.

But he said some of her visions may also have been brought on by "gastroenteritis (upset stomach), resulting from her imprisonment, her debilitated state," and perhaps even food poisoning.

"We know her trial had to be interrupted because of illness," Kenyon wrote. "We also know she had visual hallucinations which included lilliputian figures."

Either way, the phantoms were "probably reinforced" by long periods of fasting and prayer, the psychiatrist said.

Working from what slim evidence is available, Kenyon said Joan of Arc probably was about 5-feet-2, with "close-cropped dark hair, well-developed breasts."

She was tough. "One calculation made was that in 15 months in 1429-30 she travelled on foot and horseback no less than 3,630 miles," he said.

Turkeys Priced Low

OTTAWA (CP) — Christmas turkeys will be plentiful at low prices this year, the agriculture department said Thursday in its December food outlook.

There will also be ample supplies of broiler and roaster chickens, geese and ducks, all at steady prices.

Other commodities:

Beef: Prices will remain firm.

Pork: Supplies will be adequate at relatively higher prices.

Housewife Learns

Mrs. William Lucy (Delia to friends and acquaintances alike) is a woman who, at a time when she might be sitting back and relaxing, has taken on a new and exacting work, quite different to anything she has done in the past.

Until a few weeks ago, she was a Vancouver housewife and, as she puts it, "content to be just that."

She enjoyed her home. Liked cooking, entertaining, a good show or an evening with friends.

Bought Store

"Never thought I'd be cut out for anything else," she tells you.

Then, all of a sudden, she was shaken out of that comfortable way of life, when a sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Bereza of Kitimat, visited Victoria and decided to buy one of our long-established book stores, on Douglas Street, south of Fort.

The Berezas also have a jewelry shop in Kitimat and, until they decide to sell it and come to Victoria and live permanently, Anita Bereza plans to commute from there to Victoria, at regular intervals.

To make this effective she needed someone in charge here.

"That's when my arm was twisted," Delia Lucy says with an almost unbelieving laugh. "Before I knew it I was in Victoria being briefed on how to manage a book store."

With her is the Bereza's daughter Peggy, who is taking a year away from studies to see how she likes the business world.

Naturally, for the housewife-turned-book store manager, it has not been an easy transition.

"I like the work. I like meeting people," Delia Lucy says, "but I'm not an expert on the subject of books . . . and although I'm learning fast, I do get tripped up occasionally."

Here she tells an amusing story of two Victoria women who came into the store and went immediately to the children's book section.

After a murmured conversation they turned to Mrs. Lucy with accusing eyes to ask "where are the Beatrix Potter stories?"

Missed Out

Delia says: "When we were children we somehow missed out on Peter Rabbit, Squirrel Nutkins and their buddies, and when the Beatrix Potter name was flung at me my mind jumped to the idea of big, showy modern books not little individual stories."

She searched the shelves for that type of book. The two prospective customers did their own looking. Then they turned to Mrs. Lucy, shook their heads in obvious disapproval, and walked out of the store.

Moments later, Mrs. Bereza came in. "We must get some Beatrix Potter books," was the way sister Delia greeted her.

"We've got the Beatrix Potter books," was the answer.

Sure enough. There they were. A dozen or more on a special display board next to the children's section. All three women had missed them completely.

Stories Included

To make it an even more traumatic experience, a Christmas window, arranged a day or so before, also included some of the delightful little stories.

"That's the way it's been," Delia Lucy tells you, "but I'm learning fast . . . I'm learning fast!"

THE PEOPLE'S MAYOR SPEAKS OUT

It is one thing to wax eloquent and voice theoretical dreams.

It is another thing entirely to institute practical programs to accommodate the growth by which the average homeowner can profit.

This world will always need dreamers but it will also need, if citizens are to be able to afford to own property, men who can tailor dreams to practical objectives.

To protect the average Victoria taxpayer, a broader tax base is needed.

We need Decisions not Dissension.

SWAG Forms Groups

About 80 Victoria women have formed a Status of Women Action Group to put the bite on politicians to implement the recommendations of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

An organization meeting held earlier this week at the University of Victoria was a followup to the teach-in on the report held two weeks before.

Represented in the membership of SWAG are such women's groups as the Voice of Women, the Victoria Women's Caucus, the Victoria Women's Business and Professional Club, Unitarian Women, Lady Laurier Club and the Jewish Women's Club.

The group broke up into study committees on family, economy, poverty, public life and education.

"The idea of the study groups is to have people working in the area that most interests them," said president-elect, Kathleen Ruff. "Each group is to become well informed about its particular area so as to plan action to implement the recommendations of the report."

She said the purpose of SWAG is twofold — education and action.

"Changes will not come about until the public is made aware of the problems and discrimination that women suffer in Canada today. It is necessary to change the public attitude. At the same time pressure must be directed on people in authority to put the recommendations into practice."

The study groups will meet next week on the following dates and places. Anyone is welcome to attend.

The Family group will meet on Monday, Dec. 6 at 1:30 p.m. at 3995 Shelbourne. On Tuesday the Public Life group will meet at 7:30 p.m. at 3930 Telegraph Bay Rd., Poverty at 8 p.m. at 420 Superior, Apt. 14, and Economy at 8 p.m. at 3940 Ansell. The Education group will get together on Wednesday at 8 p.m. at 2412 Central Ave.

JACKIE LIVES IN DREAD OF ASSAULT

NEW YORK (AP) — Jacqueline Onassis has charged that she lives in "dread fear" of an assault by free-lance photographer Ronald Galella and consequently is "an absolute prisoner" in her Fifth Avenue apartment.

"I do not exaggerate," the widow of president John F. Kennedy wrote in an affidavit to U.S. district court. "I tell the court plainly that I fear for my safety."

Mrs. Onassis already has sued Galella for $1.5 million alleging harassment and he has sued her for $1.3 million claiming that she is interfering with his business.

Judge Irving Ben Cooper commented Thursday that Galella "has renewed conduct and activities causing immediate and irreparable harm to the mental and physical well-being of Mrs. Onassis."

CAUSED UPROAR

Cooper ordered Galella to show cause Dec. 15 why he should not be found in contempt of a previous restraining order and pay Mrs. Onassis $10,000 to purge himself.

In her affidavit, Mrs. Onassis cited picture-taking attempts by Galella and some associates Wednesday night when she attended the opening of Two Gentlemen of Verona at the St. James Theatre.

'Galella and three or four of his colleagues . . . came rushing down the aisle and began taking flash pictures right there. A general uproar ensued. I was humiliated."

She also charged that Galella followed her party to the Russian Tea Room restaurant and again "caused a great deal of commotion and much humiliation for me."

Judge Cooper ordered Galella to stay 100 yards away from the apartment house and 50 yards away from Mrs. Onassis and her two children, Caroline and John Kennedy, pending the Dec. 15 hearing.

DIRECTOR of Oak Bay's new senior citizens' centre, due to be opened 3 p.m. Dec. 18, is Mrs. Maybelle Murphy. The centre is at 1442 Monterey and can also be reached by footpaths from Hampshire and Oak Bay.

Shoeless 'Swindlers'

TORONTO (CP) — A job applicant who fails to wear shoes or bathe is a legal swindler, Controller Mel Lastman of the Metropolitan Toronto borough of North York said Thursday.

"The person doesn't want that job. He'd rather go back and collect welfare," he told the last of four public hearings of an Ontario government group studying welfare recipients.

Mr. Lastman, a self-made millionaire who runs a chain of appliance outlets, recommended that welfare officials be given more discretionary powers to deny welfare to "con artists" who do not want to work.

"These so-called dropouts are actually living off our society as parasites," Mr. Lastman said. "They are no better than those swindlers who commit fraud by the legal definition."

He said the present welfare policies entice teen-agers away from home because parents cannot compete with a system willing to pay teen-agers $115 a month to leave home.

The four-man study group was set up last October by Thomas Wells, minister of social and family services, to examine ways to decrease the number of single employable men on welfare—now nearly 30 per cent of the provincial general welfare assistance roll.

B.C. Fights Skeena Cancelling

B.C. will ask the federal government to head off cancellation of a shipping service that is the main supply link to the remote west coast of Vancouver Island.

The MV Skeena Prince, owned by Northland Navigation Co. Ltd., will make its last run Dec. 16, returning to Vancouver Dec. 22.

Northland said it is stopping the service because the federal department of transport is ending a $400,000 subsidy to the company and another, smaller shipping firm.

Municipal affairs minister Dan Campbell said Thursday he found it "incredible that the federal people have no concern for this situation. It leaves these communities in a lot of trouble."

Campbell said the provincial government is asking the federal government to continue the subsidies but has no plans to take over if Ottawa refuses.

Mayor K. R. Sturdy of Tahsis, one of the towns affected, said prices for bringing in goods would be greatly increased because of the cost of air freight.

The only alternative supply route for 12 communities on the west coast is air freight or barge from Vancouver. The communities, most of them tiny fishing or logging settlements, stretch along the coast from north of Tofino, where the road ends, almost to the northern tip of the island.

Defences Steeled In Submarine Hunt

Four aircraft have been relentlessly hunting the Esquimalt-based submarine HMCS Rainbow every day since Wednesday, with instructions to detect, classify, localize and attack.

There's no need for alarm, however, National defence, far from being threatened, is being strengthened by the sub hunt, part of a Commonwealth exercise out of CFB Comox.

In competition for the Fincastle Trophy, the winning aircraft's crew will be the one, to make most points in the five-day exercise in the use of detection sensors.

A crew from CFB Summerside, P.E.I. is representing Canada, after defeating a crew from CFB Comox in an earlier contest.

Also taking part are crews from the Royal Air Force, Royal Australian Air Force and the Royal New Zealand Air Force.

The competition ends Sunday with the trophy presentation scheduled for Monday in the officers' mess at the up-Island base.

Air Marshall Sir Robert Craven, air officer commanding the RAF's 18 maritime group, will present the trophy, which was donated in 1960 by the parents of an RAF coastal command air gunner, who was killed on duty.

COMPLETION OF RENOVATIONS TO THE B.C. LIQUOR CONTROL BOARD OFFICE

1016 Langley Street, Victoria, B.C.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Sealed Tenders entitled "Completion of Renovations to the B.C. Liquor Control Board Office" will be received by Secretary, Liquor Control Board, Box 640, Victoria, B.C., up to 4:00 p.m., Thursday, December 30th, 1971, and opened in public at that time and place.

Drawings and specifications may be obtained by bona fide General Contractors from Secretary, Liquor Control Board, on or after 12:00 noon, December 6th, 1971, by depositing a cheque in the amount of $50.00, made payable to the Liquor Control Board.

No offers will be accepted containing escalator or other qualifying clauses, or submitted other than in the prescribed form.

The lowest or any offer may not necessarily be accepted.

'Cheap PR Ploy' Claimed Hiding Labor Grievances

VANCOUVER (CP) — A MacMillan Bloedel official was accused Thursday of using a "cheap PR ploy" to gloss over the company's labor relations problems.

H. R. Chisholm, MB logging group vice-president, had said control of wasteful falling and bucking practices among a relatively small group of fallers in a few logging operations is a key issue in the current tension in forest industry labor relations.

Jack Munro, International Woodworkers of America regional vice-president, said he was "astonished" to hear a senior company official say the problem centres around a small group af fallers.

"It is interesting to hear a senior company official say that the firing or suspension of more than 50 people, many of whom are not fallers, arises out of what the company thinks should be done about fallers," Mr. Munro said.

"It is more interesting when you realize that these firings and suspension will cause the layoff of about 400 people at Eve River and Kelsey Bay (both on Vancouver Island) if we can't solve the problem before next week.

"But aside from that, what have the fallers got to do with the problem in Franklin River, where the company has been firing people because they won't take a cut in pay to operate a machine that the company won't negotiate a rate for?"

Mr. Munro said the current problem involves the company wanting the fallers to do extra work but not being willing to negotiate an additional rate.

Library Tenders Submitted

Seven tenders, ranging from a low of $186,372 to a high of $211,412, have been submitted for construction of the new Saanich Centennial branch library.

The tenders, opened Thursday by Alfred Hood, chairman of the Greater Victoria Library Board, were passed on to the board's architects for study and recommendation.

Hood said he expects the contract will be awarded at the Saanich council meeting Monday night.

Bids were: Herb Bates Ltd., $192,674; Cana Construction Ltd., $194,242; Dura Construction, $197,140; Farmer Construction, $186,372; E. J. Hunter and Sons Ltd., $194,085; Patterson Construction Ltd., $211,412; and G. H. Wheaton Ltd., $20,634.

The branch will be built on a site behind the Town and Country shopping centre.

Weeding Job Easier In Winter-Wet Soil

Any garden larger than a few feet square is likely to have perennial weeds. The seeds arrive on the winds as with thistles and dandelions, or in the crops of birds as vetch and burdock.

Blackberry too arrives from seemingly nowhere, but you will notice the seedlings appear either beneath house eaves, along a fenceline, or beneath the route of power wires or clothes line — all favorite perching spots for birds.

Just now is one of the best times to make a successful attack on the few deeply rooted weeds which have escaped attention all summer.

★ ★ ★

You have probably cut down the seed heads, knowing this is the first step in prevention of spreading weeds, but you still know the location of the plants. Now while the soil is full of moisture you will find the roots come away quite easily.

Dig down with a shovel or a fork (the fork is better in heavy soil; the shovel for gravelly or light soil), taking time to reach the bottom of the root.

This is another advantage of doing the job in winter — you are not surrounded by dozens of urgencies in the garden demanding instant attention.

In a half hour you will get rid of the dozen or so perennial weed roots which bothered you last summer. Don't burn them, and don't put them out for garbage collection.

Weeds are not garbage. They are simply plants growing in a place where you don't want them.

★ ★ ★

If you have followed (and filed) the illustrated series of gardening articles on home composting (in Times Saturday editions) you know that weeds are an important part of making the new rich soil your plants require.

With soil still attached, add the weeds to the pile of material being collected to make the final heap for rotting down into humus.

In lawns, weeding is difficult in summer especially if only light sprinklings are given. Dandelion and deep rooting clovers are down in dry soil and need excavations before the roots are exposed.

Try getting after the largest ones now. They pull easily from the damp soil and the surface damage will soon be eliminated as spring growth recommences.

WEATHER OUSTED BY NUDE WOMEN

BEVERLY, Ohio (UPI) — For more than seven hours this week cable television subscribers in this southeastern, Ohio community were shown two photographs of nude women.

Police said someone broke into the cable TV firm and taped the photos over dials showing the time and temperature. The dials are automatically scanned by a television camera.

The Bridge Expert

BY FRED KARPIN

Walter Wilson, a National Director of the American Contract Bridge League, claims that he is the unluckiest man on earth. He says that every day something completely unpredictable happens to him, and always for the worst, not for the better. For example, at the National Championships held this past summer in Chicago, between going to sleep one night and getting up the next morning, somebody stole the shoelaces out of his shoes!

At the same nationals, after they had completed their duties at about 12:30 a.m. one morning, four of the directors — including Walter — sat down to play a few rubbers of bridge. After the first deal, Walter quit, for he could see what the future held in store for him in the way of "luck." This was the deal, with Walter sitting South.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

SOUTH

◇ A Q J
♣ K 5

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3♣	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♡.

North's three-club bid was the initiation of the Stayman Convention, commanding South to name a major suit of four or more cards, if South had one.

West got off to the "impossible" lead of the heart five, and East's king captured the trick. East returned his remaining heart, West's ace winning. A third heart was then led, dummy ruffing with the ten and East overruffing with the jack. In time South had to lose a diamond trick, and thus incur a one-trick set.

Had West opened anything but a low heart, declarer would have fulfilled his contract with ease, since with any other opening East could not have made his jack of trumps. I think we will all agree that declarer was really unlucky.

But it was not only the result of the deal that demonstrated how unlucky Walter was. Before the deal was played, he and his partner had had a discussion as to whether or not they should use the Stayman Convention. North wanted to use it, and Walter didn't. In the end North prevailed, and it was agreed that they would employ it over both one notrump and two notrump opening bids.

If Walter had had his way, and the Stayman Convention was not to be used, North would have bid three notrump over South's two notrump opening bid. This contract would have been fulfilled automatically — except if Chicago had an earthquake. And Walter says that this was a distinct possibility.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"Listen, Dad," said Peter. "A quiz on our phone number."

"On—6345?" asked Tom. "Okay, let's have it."

The boy smiled. "Well, write down all the four digit numbers that can be made with those four digits. Like 3456, 3564, and so on. Then what total do you get if you add all those numbers together?"

Tom thought a moment, jotting down some figures on the back of an envelope. "I've got it," he declared. "And without actually writing out those numbers."

Can you do so?

(Answer Monday)

Yesterday's answer: DIGITS was 104092.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Heartburn and Other Distresses

Probably most people, and even most of my brother physicians, think that when a patient says that he has heartburn, what he has is an excess of acid in his stomach. The thing to do is to give him some alkaline drug which will neutralize the excess of acid.

Actually, through the years I have read most of the literature on heartburn, and many years ago, I carefully studied the stories of distress told me by 123 patients with heartburn. I found then that the symptoms can sometimes be met with in persons with almost no acid in their stomach. I have even seen the symptoms in the presence of complete lack of acidity of the gastric juice.

Interestingly, no matter how acid the stomach juice is, it can seldom be felt in the stomach, unless the person has an ulcer. I was found to have twice the normal amount of acid in my stomarch, but have never felt heartburn. Ordinarily, also, the mucous lining in the esophagus (the tube leading from the throat to the stomach) cannot feel acid, because many people occasionally regurgitate a little of their stomach contents into their gullet without distress. Many a time I have regurgitated a little food into my throat, where I tasted it, and still I felt no burning.

Some years ago Dr. A. M. Babey found 10 heartburn patients who had no acid at all in their stomachs, and in fact no gastric juice. He then injected some gastric juice into the lower third of each person's esophagus, and only two of them felt any burning.

Not all persons mean the same thing when they say they have heartburn, but they usually describe a burning or perhaps a hurting or rending feeling, which begins around the lower end of the breast bone and runs upward. A woman I knew who often regurgitated acid gastric juice never felt burning unless she ate cucumbers, radishes, or green peppers. Also, she had heartburn during her pregnancies, possibly because the growing fetus in her womb stimulated the lower end of her bowel and thus caused waves of contraction to run up as far as her throat.

Evidently, there is much more to heartburn than the regurgitation of acid juice into the gullet. That stomach acidity has something to do with it is indicated by the fact that bicarbonate of soda will usually give relief. My strong impression is that in order to suffer from heartburn, gastric contents, but not necessarily acid gastric contents, must regurgitate into an esophagus that has become sensitized in some way.

How does this sensitization come about? Causes are excitement, emotion or getting angry. Anyone who has seen as I have, how red and irriated the inside of the bowel becomes when a person is upset, will understand the strong influence of emotion in producing gastric upsets.

A tendency to heartburn runs in some families. Also, the condition can result from eating too much, eating certain foods, drinking certain liquors, or smoking certain brands of tobacco.

Curiously, after suffering for years with heartburn, some persons suddenly get well for no reason that they can see.

I regret that I never thought to make a study to see which of the several anti-heartburn preparations on the market give the most relief. It would seem that most of the acid-neutralizing drugs on the market work well enough, because during my 35 years or more as a gastroenterologist (stomach and bowel specialist) only a few patients came complaining primarily of heartburn.

I saw hundreds of men with an ulcer in the duodenum (the foot-long section of bowel just below the stomach), but they generally complained of "hunger pain," an abdominal pain that came usually just before meal time and was immediately relieved by the taking of food. That is quite a different story than the one told me by a heartburn sufferer.

Two-Front India War Erupts

GALLANT CONVOY of sanding trucks stand at the ready, lest the deadly dusting of snow on the Malahat cuts the vital artery to the rest of Vancouver Island. Meanwhile, on the slopes of Green Mountain, a more respectable 36 inches welcomed skiers on the first day of the season. Winter's freezing fingers will be to 27 degrees in Victoria tonight.

Debate Ends Dec. 8 Tax Bill by Christmas

OTTAWA (CP) — The government guillotine dropped Thursday, assuring passage of its massive tax bill by Christmas but leaving Parliament in an uncertain mood.

The House voted 121 to 80 in favor of a motion to close committee-of-the-whole discussion next Wednesday, which would mark 44 days of scrutiny, 32 in item-by-item committee debate.

A similar time limit may be placed on third-reading debate and Commons passage of the 707-page overhaul of the tax laws may come as early as Dec. 13.

Then, while the Senate deals with the bill, the Commons will debate a further tax bill to implement income-tax cuts introduced Oct. 14 by Finance Minister E. J. Benson.

Parliament could be in session Christmas Eve, even with the time limitations, to pass the bills that are designed to come into effect Jan. 1.

MANY OFF TAX ROLLS

The new laws will mean that hundreds of thousands of low wage earners no longer will pay income tax, those in slightly higher brackets will pay less, the rich will face a capita gains tax for the first time, and businesses and corporations will face a blizzard of new tax rules.

House veteran Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg "chaos, furore and ill will" would result from the government move.

SPEAKER CRACKS DOWN

By day's end, the prophecy was being fulfilled. Speaker Lucien Lamoureux, after a testy question period, threatened at one point to adjourn the House if order wasn't observed.

Outside the House, Mr. Knowles said;

"It's a strange way to back into the Christmas spirit, isn't it? By the time this is done, this Parliament won't have the authority it ought to have."

Mr. Stanfield, referring to renewed election rumors, said the cabinet knew that "the rosy bloom of this government has faded . . . They have felt the tide of popular support run out on them."

TRUDEAU SILENT

Prime Minister Trudeau sat through it but did not speak, except to flick remarks across the green carpet that separates government and opposition. He grinned as former prime minister John Diefenbaker taunted im.

The 76-year-old Mr. Diefenbaker compared Mr. Trudeau to Machiavelli, the medieval Italian political adviser "known for his craftiness."

The 121-to-80 vote found New Democrats Max Saltsman (Waterloo) and Andrew Brewin (Toronto Greenwood) voting with 119 Liberals. Opposed were 56 Conservatives, 14 New Democrats and 10 Social Credit members.

ISRAEL BEATS ARABS TO PUNCH

UNITED NATIONS — Israeli officials, in a diplomatic offensive coinciding with opening of General Assembly debate on the Middle East, called today for Arab-Israeli negotiations instead of war to end the current crisis.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad was the lead-off speaker in this afternoon's debate, and Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban will reply on Monday.

But even before the session began, Israeli acting Prime Minister Yigal Allon told a luncheon in Jerusalem he was hopeful Egypt would change its position and agree to more indirect negotiations with Israel in hopes of finding a peaceful settlement.

Top IRA Kingpins Whisked From Prison

BELFAST — The Irish Republican Army appeared today to have driven a big hole into Northern Ireland's security setup by whisking three of its top operatives out of Belfast's Crumlin Road prison fortress.

The trio's disappearance into a thick fog shrouding the capital came only two weeks after nine other suspected IRA agents broke out, clambering over the jail's towering walls with the aid of rope ladders.

Republican sources claimed the three were safely over the border in the Irish Republic.

As the republic would almost certainly regard the men as freed political prisoners, extradition would seem out of the question.

Six of the men who escaped Nov. 19 later surfaced in Dublin to give a news conference. Only two were recaptured — as they drove south toward the frontier disguised as priests.

WERE KEY CAPTIVES

Two of the three latest escapers were identified by informed sources as Martin Meehan and Anthony Dutch Doherty. British army intelligence regard them as among the most important captures since internment without trial was introduced in August to crush the IRA.

Meehan was said by the sources to be the leader of Belfast's Ardoyne district command of the IRA, which is fighting to bring Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland under the rule of the Roman Catholic republic.

Doherty is widely reported to be a top guerrilla gunman.

Meanwhile more than 300 British soldiers swept into the Roman Catholic Bogside district of Londonderry today in a search that provoked fighting with residents but netted 29 nail bombs and stocks of explosives, the army said.

A gunman fired a single shot at an army observation post at the edge of the Bogside and five nail bombs were hurled at troops in Bishop Street. There were no injuries.

The soldiers found, in addition to about 30 pounds of explosive, some bomb-making equipment and about 200 detonators, the spokesman said.

GIVE, SAID BANDIT . . . AND SO HE DID

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — A gunman accosted 60-year-old Cliff Brady Thursday while he was working in a service station and told him, "Give it to me."

Brady did. He said he belted the gunman in the mouth, knocking him to the ground. When the assailant got up, Brady said, he knocked him down again. Crawling to his feet again, the gunman fled.

Police said all that was lost was a little skin from Brady's knuckles.

Paris Police Foil Hijack

PARIS (AP) — For six hours today a hijacker held for ransom a Pakistani airliner at Orly airfield, with a threat to blow it up and kill the passengers unless he received 20 tons of medicine for Pakistan refugees.

At nightfall police rushed the jetliner and seized the man in a burst of gunfire.

The police charge came while quantities of drugs were being loaded aboard the Pakistan International Airlines 720-B.

A police official said the hijacker was overcome by an officer who entered the aircraft wearing a Red Cross arm band.

The hijacker was officially identified as Jean Kay. Officials said he fired once while he was being overcome, and "received a couple of blows" as he scuffled with other policemen who entered the aircraft through a trap door. A police officer was slightly wounded by a gunshot in the hand.

U.S. Dollar Lower As Run Continues

LONDON (UPI)—The U.S. dollar spiralled downward on European money markets today, hitting postwar lows for the second straight day in Frankfurt, Zurich, Amsterdam and Brussels.

In Paris, the French government clamped stringent controls on foreign speculators after a 10-day wave of dollar selling that forced massive intervention by the Bank of France in an effort to underpin exchange rates.

Only in London did the U.S. currency show signs of recovery from Thursday's batterings, sparked by rumors of U.S. dollar revaluation at this week's meeting in Rome of the world's 10 richest non-communist nations.

Frankfurt dealers traded the American dollar at an exchange rate of 3.2825 German marks, a de facto devaluation of 11.5 per cent from the old parity of 4 marks to the dollar.

De facto devaluation reached 9 per cent in Amsterdam, where the dollar brought only 3.3020 Dutch guilders today, and 8.54 per cent in Brussels, where the rate fell to 45.73 Belgian francs to the dollar.

New Bid Planned For Gas

Pacific Northern Gas Ltd. of Vancouver, a subsidiary of Westcoast Transmission Company, Thursday announced it will go before the Public Utilities Commission to bid for the right to supply natural gas to Vancouver Island.

R. M. Rutherford, PNG president, said the decision was prompted by Premier Bennett's statement earlier this week that the PUC could hear applications from any British Columbia company.

The PUC earlier had invited only Malaspina Gas Pipelines Ltd. to submit an application. Westcoast is not permitted to submit an application because it is federally incorporated and under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board.

Westcoast owns all the voting shares of PNG and with Phillips Petroleums of the United States, a majority of class A shares.

PNG DIRECTOR

Kelly Gibson, Westcoast chairman and chief executive officer, is a director of PNG.

Mines Minister Frank Richter said today, "We don't care if anybody applies; that's up to the PUC."

He also said the initial terms of reference for applications set down by Bennett last spring "didn't preclude anyone from putting forth another scheme."

He said Westcoast's ownership in PNG is not a problem because PNG is a B.C. incorporated company. Richter denied the government has abandoned its guidelines by allowing PNG's application.

CONSIDER THEM

He indicated the government would consider a proposal not meeting the original guidelines.

"If they were reasonable and the PUC were prepared to recommend, the government would look at them," Richter said.

This does not mean the government is committing itself to follow the PUC recommendations, Richter said. PUC chairman Dr. J. F. K. English has been advised by the mines minister to hear applications from companies other than Mamaspina.

Gibson said today in Vancouver he doesn't think Westcoast's ownership in PNG will hurt its chances before the commission.

He based his opinion on Bennett's statement and the fact that PNG is provincially incorporated.

NO DATE SET

English has not set a date for hearings on applications other than to say they will not be held until next year.

Rutherford said PNG's decision was reached only Thursday, so he could not release full details.

In general terms, PNG's plan is to extend Westcoast's pipeline from Williams Lake to Tidewater at Powell River. The new line would be 234 miles long. Gas would be sold at Powell River to the other pipeline applicants on a "cost-of-service basis," Rutherford said.

Pakistani Jets Bomb Airports

Times News Services

The India-Pakistan conflict spread to two fronts today with Pakistani planes bombing three Indian airports and an apparent all-out offensive by Indian troops into West Pakistan.

India immediately declared a national emergency but denied the charge, made by Radio Pakistan, that its troops had entered that country. The broadcast, it said, was an attempt to cover up the Pakistani air raids which included one on Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir.

An Indian government spokesman, briefing reporters as New Delhi was thrown into darkness by an unexpected air raid warning, said Pakistani aircraft attacked Amritsar in the western Punjab and Pathankot, also in the Punjab, as well as Srinagar.

The defence ministry spokesman said that the airports appeared to be the main targets of the attacks.

Pakistan radio, reporting on charges of Indian attacks against West Pakistan, said the situation remained confused.

It was the first major action reported on the West Pakistan northern Indian front. The fighting had previously been concentrated on East Pakistan's border with India.

FIGHT ON SEVEN FRONTS

Radio Pakistan reported that India had sent three more divisions in the biggest Indian offensive so far against Pakistan and fierce fighting was reported on seven fronts around the borders of East Pakistan.

In New Delhi, President V. V. Giri issued the emergency proclamation on behalf of the Indian government because of the unprovoked aggression by Pakistan."

The president, the constitutional head of state, at the same time summoned both houses of parliament into a special session Saturday to approve the "Defence of India Bill," emergency legislation that would give the government wide police powers.

New Delhi airport was closed to international traffic until further notice. Internal flights have been diverted to airports other than New Delhi.

Radio Pakistan said the air strikes were made "as a counter-measure to meet the challenge" of Indian attacks that began before dawn from India's Rajasthan Desert and southwestern Kashmir.

The Associated Press reported from New Delhi there appeared little doubt that India and Pakistan were again at "all-out war"—for the third time since they became independent in August, 1947, after the partition of British India into predominantly Hindu and Moslem states.

In the air attacks, India also reported that four Pakistani Sabre jets heading for Agartala in Tripura state this afternoon were intercepted and three damaged.

The spokesman described raids by the Pakistani air force on the airfields of Amritsar, Srinagar and Pathankot as "a blatant attack."

Srinagar is about 200 miles north of New Delhi. Pathankot is some 150 miles north and slightly west of the Indian capital: Amritsar, only 10 miles from the West Pakistan border, is 120 miles northwest of New Delhi.

PM RETURNS TO CAPITAL

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was informed of the attacks and was flying back to New Delhi from Calcutta. She had flown to Calcutta only a few hours earlier to begin a tour of the border with East Pakistan.

Mrs. Gandhi told a public meeting in Calcutta that India did not want war with any country but if war was thrust on her she would fight it with all her strength.

Mrs. Gandhi called on the Indian people to be ready for any sacrifice.

TWO-FRONT WAR has apparently begun between India and Pakistan. Only One Hurdle Left for Oil Pipeline

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Interior Secretary Rogers Morton said Thursday that interior department approval of the controversial trans-Alaska oil pipeline should be given by the end of January, but said later he did not mean he definitely would approve the project.

During a Seattle radio broadcast, Morton said an environmental impact statement required by a federal court before the department can take any action on the pipeline should be finished about Jan. 15.

★ ★ ★

"As to the issuance of the permit it looks as though it will follow very closely behind," he added. "I will consult with the president, I will consult with chairman Russell Train of the council on environmental quality and, perhaps, some other officials of government, but we should be ready to issue a permit certainly, before the end of January."

Reached later by phone in Portland, Ore., Morton said he had been quoted correctly, but that he had not meant the permit definitely would be issued.

Lawyers for Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., the firm which wants to build the line, have asked for an additional 30 days to work on legal documents they need to defend their proposals, against suits brought by conservation and Alaskan native groups, Morton said during the Seattle broadcast.

Oil from the pipeline would come past Victoria in tankers on the way to the refinery near Bellingham.

The environment groups have said in public hearings that the proposed pipeline and the oil tankers threaten severe environmental damage through disruption of land and the danger of oil spills.

They have urged the interior department to consider an alternative route entirely over land through Canada which would avoid Alaska's earthquake belt and the need for tankers.

★ ★ ★

"I think we have done everything within our power to consider a Canadian alternative," Morton said Thursday.

"For one thing, there has been no application for a Canadian route. There has been no overt action on the part of the Canadian government nor on the part of an oil company consortium in Canada.

"The only application we have before us is the trans-Alaska route."

Le Mans to Remain Full 24-Hour Race

LE MANS, France (AP) — Threats to cut the famous 24-hour Le Man Auto race down to as short as six hours were firmly rejected by the organizers here Wednesday.

Making public the rules for the 40th running of the classic next June 10-11, president Jean-Marie Lelievre of the organizing Automobile Club de L'Ouest said it would be "a genuine 24-hour race . . . and certainly not the last."

It will be open to special saloon cars and the circuit will include a new section bypassing a dangerous curve — but adding nine more bends.

Moves have been started both to cut world championship sports car races to six hours or 1,000 kilometres, and to forbid drivers racing for more than six hours in any one event.

Club officials said Le Man would continue outside the championship, if necessary. Briton John Wyer, manager of the world champion Gulf-Porsche Team, said he thought the driver ruling "stood no chance."

"I've heard no support for it," Wyer said.

Top Racing Drivers Seek Improved Fire Precautions

LONDON (AP) — The world's top racing drivers will meet in London this week to demand stepped up fire precautions after allegations that Swiss ace Jo Siffert need not have died.

Siffert, 35, died in the blazing wreckage of his car five weeks ago at Britain's Brand Hatch circuit.

A pathologist told an inquest Friday that his only injury from the crash was a broken leg.

"One can certainly say that if there had been no fire he would not have died," he said.

As it was, no one could get near him for five minutes. Track marshals testified at the inquest that two fire extinguishers failed to work and a third was ineffective.

One of them said that but for these failures he was certain Siffert could have been pulled clear with 20 seconds.

URGE BETTER CARE

The seven-man inquest jury returned a verdict of accidental death and added: "We suggest better supervision of safety and fire precautions."

Louis Stanley, secretary of the Grand Prix Drivers Association, immediately called a meeting of world drivers to be held in London.

He said he wants drivers to insist that every track should have six highspeed fire tenders capable of at least 100 m.p.h.

Emergency lights should be installed on every track, he said, to warn following drivers of fire hazards ahead.

HELICOPTER SUGGESTED

Another suggestion he put forward is that each race should be watched from a fire-fighting helicopter. Tests have shown that a helicopter's blades can fan flames away from a burning car, even into the wind, he said.

Christopher Lowe, a director of the brands Hatch circuit, said safety precautions at the track were in line with rules of the Royal Automobile Club and in some ways were above the minimum. The fire extinguishers had been tested the day before the race, he said.

CHRYSLER DROPS STOCKS

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. announced Wednesday that it will not provide factory support for any stock car racing teams for the 1972 swason.

Chrysler thus ended the successful affiliation it had maintained with several stock car teams, notably that of Richard Petty's National Association of Stock Car Racers championship Plymouth team.

Dodge and Plymouth drivers now hold championships in the five major stock car circuits.

Wiser, Tolerant, Real —Lessons of the Road

The Thumbs-Up Club is well and truly launched and we'll just have this one more brief recruitment pep-talk before we pass on to more serious things.

I'm not able to reply to the considerable numbers of people who have sent me 35 cents for a windshield sticker, but the first batch of them have been sent out and there's a hundred or more here for those of you who may care to join in.

You were out to lunch when this began? Well, it's just that this is a demonstrably heartless town when it comes to motorists picking up people without transportation and it seemed a pleasant idea for those of us who enjoy doing that to make some small gesture — show our own flag, so to speak — just for the heck of it.

A fast sampling of the first load of mail indicates that a good many people have been thinking along the same lines. Here are a few typical excerpts:

★ ★ ★

"I'm not one of those 'nicer people,' whatever that means, but I'm ready to pick up anybody along the highway who needs a lift," writes Jim Williams with a three-dollar donation to the club.

★ ★ ★

"Here's my 35 cents for the 'Yes sticker,'" writes Bud Pauls. "A year or so ago I wrote a letter to the paper 'as a public service' and told how I got rid of those scruffy young people on our highways: 'I pick them up.' As a result I received some kooky phone calls and nutty letters, but I've also enjoyed the company, for minutes or hours, of many interesting people. Once, at Hope, two young kids I had picked up washed my car with their jackets soaked in ditch water while I had a coffee. (They had refused to be my guests.) Never have I had any trouble. Often I have been saddened by their departures. Sometimes, I think, all involved have become a little wiser, more tolerant, more real."

★ ★ ★

"That's a great idea," writes Michael Callan. "Not only will it get people around with less cars downtown, but it will help people here to be more sociable."

★ ★ ★

"Congratualtions on a really great idea; I predict it will become a national movement," writes Fred Gillies. "Just one little thing: Have you ever stopped to offer a ride to a middle-aged or elderly lady during bad weather and been rewarded with a withering look and a stony silence as if you were a mobile Jack The Ripper?"

★ ★ ★

W. J. Havelaar: "Count me in. A fine idea and one that will work. I wanted you to know that there are people who, like yourself, feel that the luxury of a car puts the owner on obligation to help those who are less fortunate. The sight, every day, of hundreds of cars carrying one occupant to his or her work and back is a sickening experience."

★ ★ ★

Aline Flood, who lives away out on the West Coast Road, picks up absolutely everybody who needs a ride and writes:

"A woman, alone in a car, isn't 'expected' to stop to give a man a lift. There are a lot of civilization's lousy rules that I don't use and that's one of them. I've had nothing but courtesy and appreciation, sometimes awesome in its sincerity. Take these people as you find them; don't be judge and jury for the way they look and dress. They'll all furnish a worthwhile contact with your fellow human being and — who knows? — you may need a ride, yourself, some day. The whole process of picking up hikers reminds me of a plaque I once saw on the wall of a Catholic hospital. It read: 'God does not count our deeds . . . he weighs them.'"

★ ★ ★

Mustn't wrap this up without a thank-you to James Golightly, president of Sooke Stages, who has reason not to be fond of hitchhikers, but has written an amiable letter commenting on my facetious remark that the Happy Valley bus runs every other week.

"We are presently preparing to inaugurate a new schedule which will reduce service to Happy Valley and Metchosin to 56 buses every two weeks, still 56 times more service than you state in your column," he notes.

On the subject of hitchhikers: "I find that most of them with whom I have had dealings are vociferous about the absence of a viable transportation system, but are among the most stubborn about supporting such a system when one is offered. They complain about not enough buses, but refuse to put a quarter in the box to make it worth somebody's while to run the bus. Where the service is used it is continued and improved.

"While we indeed sympathize with people in need of transportation, we are not greatly moved by the plight of a youngster we saw this morning who stood in one of our bus stops, hitchhiking, while the bus loaded its regular passengers . . . This lad exemplifies the crowd who complain about lack of transportation for them because they won't use it.

"If you have your little stickers printed, please send us a few. We'd like these people to ride our buses as well as in your car."

Rubble Destroys Harbor Beach

By CLEMENT CHAPPLE

One of the few recreational stretches of Victoria's harbor beach is under a developer's rockfill and no one has granted permission.

The rock fill was dumped by Diamond Development Ltd. despite an earlier report from the city parks department that Barnard Beach should not be sacrificed for development.

Parks director Cliff Bate was asked last year to report on the recreational value of the beach and recommended against filling the area as proposed by an earlier developer.

Bate said today he is annoyed to find now that the developer of the building now under construction has dumped rock for a roadway at least 14 feet below the high water mark.

Other city hall officials expressed annoyance at the fill and said they gave no permission. The rockfill is being used as a truck lane for heavy transport to the development.

The area is under the jurisdiction of the federal government and a federal official said today there has been no decision made on whether the fill will be allowed because no applications have been received.

Charles Brooks of the Department of Transport said however the situation is "in hand."

He said there must be permission given to lease the land and there must be clearance under the federal navigable waters legislation.

Before the rockfill was dumped, the beach was used as a recreational spot by residents of the area. At high tide the rockfill obliterates the beach entirely.

The city at present is negotiating with Ottawa to acquire an adjacent site which is needed for a park.

MURDER ATTEMPT CHARGED

A 43 - yeitr - old railroad worker was charged with attempted murder today following a fracas in a CPR work car in which another man was shot in the neck.

Joseph McKenna of Port Alberni was remanded to Dec. 10 to fix a day for preliminary hearing. Bail was set at $20,000 by Judge William Ostler.

In fair condition in St. Joseph's Hospital is Lawrence Walsh, 30. Police said he was shot in the left side of the neck by a slug from a 12-gauge shotgun.

The incident occurred in a bunkhouse car of a train standing near the Victoria Plywood plant on Hallowell Road. The train runs up and down the Island carrying workmen and equipment for track and bridge repair.

Colwood RCMP officers who went to investigate the shooting were held at bay for 10 minutes by a man wielding a shotgun before McKenna was arrested.

Pot Trucker Guilty

Richard V. Bird, 23, today was convicted of importing 74 pounds, one ounce of marijuana into Canada Aug. 29.

The drug was concealed in a camper-truck that arrived on the Black Ball ferry from Port Angeles.

Judge Edmond St. Jorre remanded Bird to Dec. 17 for presentence report and sentence.

Bird has been in custody, unable to raise $25,000 bail, since he was arrested Aug. 29.

St. Jorre in today's judgment referred to the four submissions of defence counsel Edward Pollard earler in the trial.

The judge said the Customs Act could not be invoked in the case.

Pollard earlier had said it was not clear under which act the accused had been charged.

UNNECESSARY

St. Jorre said it was "unnecessary" for the Crown to state the actual act if the charge followed the wording of the statute itself.

St. Jorre said the Crown had done this, adding that prosecutor Cecil Branson pointed out in summation that Bird was charged under section five of the Narcotics Control Act.

The section deals the illegal importing or exporting of a narcotic to or from Canada.

The judge ruled that the Crown was correct in laying the charge at Victoria as he viewed the offence as "a continuing one."

Pollard had said the prosecution failed to prove importation took place three miles from the city when the accused entered Canadian waters.

St. Jorre ruled that Branson did not have to prove Bird a Canadian because the offence was continuing.

BID FAILED

Pollard's contention was that the Crown failed to prove the accused a Canadian. The Criminal Code states consent of the Attorney-General of Canada is required for proceedings if the accused is an alien.

Branson countered, saying there was no evidence Bird was an alien and it was not incumbent on the Crown to prove he was not a citizen of Canada.

St. Jorre said testimony of the first mate on the M.V. Coho, which travelled from Port Angeles to Victoria Aug. 29, "negatized" the defence position that the ship may have stopped somewhere between Port Angeles and Victoria the day of the offence.

Nurses Call for Mediator

Bargaining 'Sham'

Registered nurses will apply for a government mediation officer after breaking off negotiations Thursday in Vancouver.

The sudden move came one day after it was learned that the government has placed a 6.5 per cent ceiling on salaries and fringe benefit increases in 1972.

The Registered Nurses' Association of B.C., with about 5,500 members involved in the negotiations with 75 hospitals, criticized the B.C. Hospitals Association for saying that it would be governed by the ceiling.

"This was tantamount to an ultimatum to take it or leave it, which in our view made a sham of the whole bargaining process," the RNABC said in a statement.

"If this ultimatum had been accepted by the RNABC bargaining committee it would have set a precedent that would jeopardize the bargaining position not only of the RNABC but of many other groups in the province for the present and future years as well.

"The threat was made by implication that unless we accepted the ceiling, staff cuts would result and patients would suffer. In our view patients have a right to good nursing care and nurses have a right to remuneration on a par with that of other groups in society."

NURSES' WELFARE

Margaret Neylan, president of the RNABC, said nurses have a responsibility for maintaining good patient care "but we do not believe that this can be achieved at the expense of the welfare of nurses."

The 10,500-strong Hospital Employees Union, representing non-professional staff, said it will not accept the pay and fringe benefit increase ceiling. A formal statement was expected early next week after a provincial executive meeting.

The government's move, made known in a letter to hospital boards by D. M. Cox, deputy minister of hospital insurance, said there is a limit to the funds available for hospitals.

The only exceptions to the 6½ per cent ceiling on pay raises and fringe benefits would be unemployment insurance and superannuation.

The Hospital Employees Union, which moved to the mediation officer stage last month, has been seeking a 25 per cent across-the-board wage increase over two years. The RNABC has not publicly disclosed its proposals.

Ray McCready, secretary-manager of the Hospital Employees Union, said a major point was wage parity for men and women. To achieve this, however, women would have to get more than the 6.5 per cent ceiling.

In October, the government announced it will not share in 1972 teacher salary increases beyond 6.5 per cent. Civil servants received average salary increases of 6.5 per cent this year.

John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union, said he would not be surprised to see civil servants held again to 6.5 per cent.

"I hope that the teachers will fight, the hospital workers will fight . . . we would fight this if it is imposed on us," he said.

'Tightwad' May Dispel Symphony's Money Blues

A notorious tightwad and the world's worst violinist may save Victoria's symphony from going under financially.

And to see him perform, it may cost $50 a-seat.

Directors of the Victoria Symphony Society agreed in principle to bring in comedian Jack Benny for a benefit concert in April.

In a memo to directors, general manager John Addicott envisaged making a minimum of $30,000 if "a powerhouse of man can be found to rise up and take over the dynamic leadership of this event."

Actually, Benny is not a cheapskate, for Addicott, in a conversation with the comedian's agent Wednesday, found that his fee would only be $1,800, just to cover travelling, accommodation and a reception area.

And Benny is not actually a terrible violinist.

CONVINCE AGENT

"He's a qualified musician who has considerable experience in playing with orchestras," Addicott said.

He said arrangements for the concert will be confirmed on Wednesday if he can convince Benny's agent that there is "an upswelling of interest" in such an event here.

The date of Benny's appearance with the symphony will likely be April 21, at the McPherson Playhouse.

Addicott proposed selling tickets for $100 for 200 couples, which would fill up half the theatre and bring in $20,000. The balance of tickets could go from $10 down to $5.

High-priced ticket owners would then be allowed to attend a reception afterwards.

"It need not be an expensive affair and could consist of hors d'oeuvres and champagne."

"This could be on enormous life-saver for the symphony," Addicott said.

BENNY
. . . savior of the day?

Di Castri Heads Symphony

Architect John Di Castri was Thursday night named president of the troubled Victoria Symphony Society, to complete the term of Stuart Soward, who resigned a week ago as a result of the organization's financial woes.

Di Castri, who has been a member of the board of directors for less than a year, was elected by acclamation after a second nominee, John Graeme, withdrew and pledged his full support to the new president.

Soward's resignation came last week after he warned the board of a possible $40,000 deficit. Albert Hestler, vice-president for finance, also resigned at the same time after telling the directors the society would be "insolvent within the next 18 months."

★ ★ ★

Following Di Castri's election as president Thursday night, the directors voted to start with a fresh slate by rescinding the appointments of the entire executive committee.

Robert Lapp, 4924 Wesley Road, was then elected vice-president for finance. The rest of the new executive committee will be elected later.

Di Castri, in a short addrss immediately following his election, said the society "is in deep trouble."

"Our image as far as the community goes is tarnished," he said, and to suggest the troubles of the society hinge on dollars and cents is an oversimplification.

To salvage itself, Di Castri said, the society must present a united front.

★ ★ ★

"There is no room for pettiness and personal vendettas."

"Each and every one of us has to act with integrity and respect for each other," he said. Any member of the board who cannot conduct himself in an acceptable fashion, he continued, should resign his seat.

"I cannot tolerate pettiness, I cannot tolerate gossip."

Di Castri said the "whole business structure (of the society) has to be very carefully considered" before a solution can be resolved. And he recommended against a community drive at the present time.

"We have to put our house in order before going to the community."

'Save Our Swans' Cry Comes From Saanich

The hue and cry, "leave our swans alone," is being raised by swan lovers who learned Thursday that Saanich parks committee has agreed to export the graceful birds to Powell River and Waterloo, Ont.

David Stirling, well-known ornithologist, disagrees with parks administrator Bert Richman that there is a population explosion of swans and that the only solution is to export them.

Richman estimates there are more than 100 swans in Saanich — mostly in Elk-Beaver Lakes and Portage Inlet — and he is concerned about it.

But Stirling says 100 swans are nothing to worry about it when most of the waterways in the capital region have no swans.

Saanich should be more concerned over the human population explosion than over that of swans, he said.

"I would rather see more swans than more people in Saanich," he said.

STIRLING
. . . no worries

The trouble is that few swans had been seen over a period of years. Then, when they became more noticeable, some people started to think they were over-abundant, says Stirling.

He said swans could be transplanted to Sooke Basin, Matheson Lake, Thetis Lake and the Gulf Islands.

If the swans are left alone, he says, the population would level out and many birds would seek other breeding areas, such as the Gulf Islands and the Cowichan Valley.

"Last August I canoed on Elk Lake and counted only 70 swans and six cygnets," he said.

Stirling noted that Saanich should be thankful for its swans as they feed on Elk Lake's aquatic plants, a nuisance to boaters and swimmers.

Two-Front India War Erupts

GALLANT CONVOY of sanding trucks stand at the ready, lest the deadly dusting of snow on the Malahat cuts the vital artery to the rest of Vancouver Island. Meanwhile, on the slopes of Green Mountain, a more respectable 36 inches welcomed skiers on the first day of the season. Winter's freezing fingers will be luring temperatures down to 27 degrees in Victoria tonight.

New Bid Planned For Gas

Pacific Northern Gas Ltd. of Vancouver, a subsidiary of Westcoast Transmission Company, Thursday announced it will go before the Public Utilities Commission to bid for the right to supply natural gas to Vancouver Island.

R. M. Rutherford, PNG president, said the decision was prompted by Premier Bennett's statement earlier this week that the PUC could hear applications from any British Columbia company.

The PUC earlier had invited only Malaspina Gas Pipelines Ltd. to submit an application. Westcoast is not permitted to submit an application because it is federally incorporated and under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board.

Westcoast owns all the voting shares of PNG and with Phillips Petroleums of the United States, a majority of class A shares.

PNG DIRECTOR

Kelly Gibson, Westcoast chairman and chief executive officer, is a director of PNG.

Mines Minister Frank Richter said today, "We don't care if anybody applies; that's up to the PUC."

He also said the initial terms of reference for applications set down by Bennett last spring "didn't preclude anyone from putting forth another scheme."

He said Westcoast's ownership in PNG is not a problem because PNG is a B.C. incorporated company. Richter denied the government has abandoned its guidelines by allowing PNG's application.

CONSIDER THEM

He indicated the government would consider a proposal not meeting the original guidelines.

"If they were reasonable and the PUC were prepared to recommend, the government would look at them," Richter said.

This does not mean the government is committing itself to follow the PUC recommendations, Richter said. PUC chairman Dr. J. F. K. English has been advised by the mines minister to hear applications from companies other than Mamaspina.

Gibson said today in Vancouver he doesn't think Westcoast's ownership in PNG will hurt its chances before the commission.

He based his opinion on Bennett's statement and the fact that PNG is provincially incorporated.

English has not set a date for hearings on applications other than to say they will not be held until next year.

Pakistani Jets Bomb Airports

Times News Services

The India-Pakistan conflict spread to two fronts today with Pakistani planes bombing three Indian airports and an apparent all-out offensive by Indian troops into West Pakistan.

India immediately declared a national emergency but denied the charge, made by Radio Pakistan, that its troops had entered that country. The broadcast, it said, was an attempt to cover up the Pakistani air raids which included one on Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir.

An Indian government spokesman, briefing reporters as New Delhi was thrown into darkness by an unexpected air raid warning, said Pakistani aircraft attacked Amritsar in the western Punjab and Pathankot, also in the Punjab, as well as Srinagar.

The defence ministry spokesman said that the airports appeared to be the main targets of the attacks.

Pakistan radio, reporting on charges of Indian attacks against West Pakistan, said the situation remained confused.

It was the first major action reported on the West Pakistan northern Indian front. The fighting had previously been concentrated on East Pakistan's border with India.

FIGHT ON SEVEN FRONTS

Radio Pakistan reported that India had sent three more divisions in the biggest Indian offensive so far against Pakistan and fierce fighting was reported on seven fronts around the borders of East Pakistan.

In New Delhi, President V. V. Giri issued the emergency proclamation on behalf of the Indian government because of the unprovoked aggression by Pakistan."

The president, the constitutional head of state, at the same time summoned both houses of parliament into a special session Saturday to approve the "Defence of India Bill," emergency legislation that would give the government wide police powers.

New Delhi airport was closed to international traffic until further notice. Internal flights have been diverted to airports other than New Delhi.

Radio Pakistan said the air strikes were made "as a counter-measure to meet the challenge" of Indian attacks that began before dawn from India's Rajasthan Desert and southwestern Kashmir.

The Associated Press reported from New Delhi there appeared little doubt that India and Pakistan were again at "all-out war"—for the third time since they became independent in August, 1947, after the partition of British India into predominantly Hindu and Moslem states.

In the air attacks, India also reported that four Pakistani Sabre jets heading for Agartala in Tripura state this afternoon were intercepted and three damaged.

The spokesman described raids by the Pakistani air force on the airfields of Amritsar, Srinagar and Pathankot as "a blatant attack."

PM RETURNS TO CAPITAL

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was informed of the attacks and was flying back to New Delhi from Calcutta. She had flown to Calcutta only a few hours earlier to begin a tour of the border with East Pakistan.

Mrs. Gandhi told a public meeting in Calcutta that India did not want war with any country but if war was thrust on her she would fight it with all her strength.

Mrs. Gandhi called on the Indian people to be ready for any sacrifice.

Debate Ends Dec. 8, Tax Bill by Christmas

OTTAWA (CP) — The government guillotine dropped Thursday, assuring passage of its massive tax bill by Christmas but leaving Parliament in an uncertain mood.

The House voted 121 to 80 in favor of a motion to close committee-of-the-whole discussion next Wednesday, which would mark 44 days of scrutiny, 32 in item-by-item committee debate.

A similar time limit may be placed on third-reading debate and Commons passage of the 707-page overhaul of the tax laws may come as early as Dec. 13.

Then, while the Senate deals with the bill, the Commons will debate a further tax bill to implement income-tax cuts introduced Oct. 14 by Finance Minister E. J. Benson.

Parliament could be in session Christmas Eve, even with the time limitations, to pass the bills that are designed to come into effect Jan. 1.

MANY OFF TAX ROLLS

The new laws will mean that hundreds of thousands of low wage earners no longer will pay income tax, those in slightly higher brackets will pay less, the rich will face a capital gains tax for the first time, and businesses and corporations will face a blizzard of new tax rules.

House veteran Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre) predicted "chaos, furore and ill will" would result from the government move.

SPEAKER CRACKS DOWN

By day's end, the prophecy was being fulfilled. Speaker Lucien Lamoureux, after a testy question period, threatened at one point to adjourn the House if order wasn't observed.

Outside the House, Mr. Knowles said:

"It's a strange way to back into the Christmas spirit, isn't it? By the time this is done, this Parliament won't have the authority it ought to have."

Mr. Stanfield, referring to renewed election rumors, said the cabinet knew that "the rosy bloom of this government has faded . . . they have felt the tide of popular support run out on them."

TRUDEAU SILENT

Prime Minister Trudeau sat through it but did not speak, except to flick remarks across the green carpet that separates government and opposition. He grinned as former prime minister John Diefenbaker taunted im.

The 76-year-old Mr. Diefenbaker compared Mr. Trudeau to Machiavelli, the medieval Italian political adviser "known for his craftiness."

The 121-to-80 vote found New Democrats Max Saltsman (Waterloo) and Andrew Brewin (Toronto Greenwood) voting with 119 Liberals. Opposed were 56 Conservatives, 14 New Democrats and 10 Social Credit members.

GIVE, SAID BANDIT . . . AND SO HE DID

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — A gunman accosted 60-year-old Cliff Brady Thursday while he was working in a service station and told him, "Give it to me."

Brady did. He said he belted the gunman in the mouth, knocking him to the ground. When the assailant got up, Brady said, he knocked him down again. Crawling to his feet again, the gunman fled.

Police said all that was lost was a little skin from Brady's knuckles.

Paris Police Foil Hijack

PARIS (AP) — For six hours today a hijacker held for ransom a Pakistani airliner at Orly airfield, with a threat to blow it up and kill the passengers unless he received 20 tons of medicine for Pakistan refugees.

At nightfall police rushed the jetliner and seized the man in a burst of gunfire.

The police charge came while quantities of drugs were being loaded aboard the Pakistan International Airlines 720-B.

A police official said the hijacker was overcome by an officer who entered the aircraft wearing a Red Cross arm band.

The hijacker was officially identified as Jean Kay. Officials said he fired once while he was being overcome, and "received a couple of blows" as he scuffled with other policemen who entered the aircraft through a trap door. A police officer was slightly wounded by a gunshot in the hand.

Kay is a Frenchman born in

U.S. Dollar Lower As Run Continues

LONDON (UPI)—The U.S. dollar spiralled downward on European money markets today, hitting postwar lows for the second straight day in Frankfurt, Zurich, Amsterdam and Brussels.

In Paris, the French government clamped stringent controls on foreign speculators after a 10-day wave of dollar selling that forced massive intervention by the Bank of France in an effort to underpin exchange rates.

Only in London did the U.S. currency show signs of recovery from Thursday's batterings, sparked by rumors of U.S. dollar revaluation at this week's meeting in Rome of the world's 10 richest non-communist nations.

Frankfurt dealers traded the American dollar at an exchange rate of 3.2825 German marks, a de facto devaluation of 11.5 per cent from the old parity of 4 marks to the dollar.

De facto devaluation reached 9 per cent in Amsterdam, where the dollar brought only 3.3020 Dutch guilders today, and 8.54 per cent in Brussels, where the rate fell to 45.73 Belgian francs to the dollar.

ISRAEL BEATS ARABS TO PUNCH

UNITED NATIONS — Israeli officials, in a diplomatic offensive coinciding with opening of General Assembly debate on the Middle East, called today for Arab-Israeli negotiations instead of war to end the current crisis.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad was the lead-off speaker in this afternoon's debate, and Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban will reply on Monday.

But even before the session began, Israeli acting Prime Minister Yigal Allon told a luncheon in Jerusalem he was hopeful Egypt would change its position and agree to more indirect negotiations with Israel in hopes of finding a peaceful settlement.

Sewer Rebuilding On Cook Approved

A decision by the provincial government today could mean there will be no sewage treatment plant built in the Clover Point area.

Following a meeting with resources minister Ray Williston today, Mayor Courtney Haddock announced the province has agreed to a city request to rebuild the Cook Street sewer main between May and Dallas.

WAY CLEARED

This means the way is cleared for the regional government to find a solution to sewage disposal that normally flows through the controversial Clover Point outfall.

The city has been barred from making improvements to its sewage system in that area by Health Minister Ralph Loffmark who has insisted any changes must be accompanied by construction of a treatment plant.

Such a treatment plant in the Clover point residential area has been something city hall has tried to fight off but without success.

Two possibilities for a solution are now dominant. One would be to reroute the area's sewage through a new pipe from Clover Point back to Macaulay Point outfall. The other is to build a treatment plant on Trial Island.

A third possibility is elimination of the need for a treatment plant by use of an extended outfall from the Clover Point area.

Haddock said the approval given today will let the city go ahead with much-needed repair of a main that at present causes sewage pollution along the Dallas Road beach. The pollution occurs when the old main becomes overloaded and sewage overflows into the storm drain system which empties along the beach.

$600,000 COST

The work may begin within a few months and will cost about $600,000 to the city.

The decision was met with enthusiasm from city engineer James Garnett who said repair of the old main is a very important step.

In his announcement, Haddock said Williston "fully concurred" with the city's request.

Only One Hurdle Left for Oil Pipeline

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Interior Secretary Rogers Morton said Thursday that interior department approval of the controversial trans-Alaska oil pipeline should be given by the end of January, but said later he did not mean he definitely would approve the project.

During a Seattle radio broadcast, Morton said an environmental impact statement required by a federal court before the department can take any action on the pipeline should be finished about Jan. 15.

★ ★ ★

"As to the issuance of the permit it looks as though it will follow very closely behind," he added. "I will consult with the president, I will consult with chairman Russell Train of the council on environmental quality and, perhaps, some other officials of government, but we should be ready to issue a permit certainly before the end of January."

Reached later by phone in Portland, Ore., Morton said he had been quoted correctly, but that he had not meant the permit definitely would be issued.

Lawyers for Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., the firm which wants to build the line, have asked for an additional 30 days to work on legal documents they need to defend their proposals against suits brought by conservation and Alaskan native groups, Morton said during the Seattle broadcast.

Oil from the pipeline would come past Victoria in tankers on the way to the refinery near Bellingham.

The environment groups have said in public hearings that the proposed pipeline and the oil tankers threaten severe environmental damage through disruption of land and the danger of oil spills.

They have urged the interior department to consider an alternative route entirely over land through Canada which would avoid Alaska's earthquake belt and the need for tankers.

★ ★ ★

"I think we have done everything within our power to consider a Canadian alternative," Morton said Thursday.

"For one thing, there has been no application for a Canadian route. There has been no overt action on the part of the Canadian government nor on the part of an oil company consortium in Canada.

"The only application we have before us is the trans-Alaska route."

Quebec Workshop Vote Endorses General Strike

MONTREAL (CP) — Delegates to the biennial convention of the Quebec Federation of Labor voted in workshops to approve the use of the general strike as legitimate union action, a convention organizer said Thursday.

The workshop vote, however, has no binding effect on the QFL. It was to be submitted for discussion and ratification in a general meeting today.

Fewer than half of the 850 delegates were present at the workshops when the vote was taken. A sizeable proportion of those who supported it added amendments that QFL headquarters must consult union locals and call an emergency general meeting before calling for a general strike.

One workshop chairman said he interpreted the resolution as simply a statement of principle which did not necessarily commit the QFL to specific general-strike action.

Delegates were also to vote today in a general meeting on whether or not to support the Quebec nationalist movement.

In the workshop discussions on the general strike, Jean Campeau, president of the Canadian Union of Public employees' local at Hydro-Quebec in Montreal, said: "Lobbying and the other old methods labor has been using for the last 50 years haven't worked."

"More powerful methods of pressure should be used to support worker's demands."

Delegate Norman Mergler said he had been repeatedly forced during the convention to come out against issues with which he agreed in principle because of the way they were presented.

"If this resolution is passed now, it will encourage people to think that a semi-emergency is really a full-blown emergency. But there is no such emergency now."

There was more agreement in discussion of a proposal that all votes by QFL-affiliated unions on strike action and acceptance of contracts be by secret ballot.

Another proposal, if accepted in plenary session today, will mean the QFL supports the principle of negotiating contracts together for all workers in a given industry.

VOTE ON POLITICS

Delegates voted Thursday in plenary session to study the possibility of mass participation in a political party and if necessary to create a new party at a later date.

"The resolution does not mean that tomorrow morning the QFL will go out and support any particular party and it doesn't state any time limit," FLQ President Louis Laberge told a news conference.

"I believe it was purposefully worded to give us enough leeway to make the necessary decisions at the proper time."

Earlier in workshops however, delegates had voted 253 to 156 against mass QFL participation in a political party and 350 to 72 against creating a new labor party.

SPEC Show in Harbor

The Society for Pollution and Environmental Control will hold an anti-pollution demonstration at 10:30 a.m. Saturday on the Inner Harbor Causeway.

Theme of the demonstration will be "Our Harbor. Stop dumping your wastes into it. Dispose of or recycle them in an intelligent manner."

SPEC is concerned over the 15-month extension given companies to register discharges with the provincial director of pollution control. The deadline is now March 31, 1975.

Victoria SPEC president John White said dozens of industrial surface drains are running into the harbor.

Many industries are at fault, but the demonstration will focus on Bapco Paint, as an example of an offender, a press release said. SPEC will display some of Bapco's "products" and deliver a protest letter.

A 20-minute slide show on the state of the Inner Harbor will be shown tonight at 8:15 at Cool-Aid, Fernwood and Gladstone.

Fish, Seal Pact Signed

OTTAWA (UPI) — External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp announced Thursday night agreements phasing out Norwegian fishing operations in Canadian East Coast waters by 1974, but permitting Norway to continue to hunt seal in some Canadian territorial waters.

The agreements would permit Norway to hunt seal off parts of the Newfoundland and Labrador coasts and would set up a two-nation regulatory commission to oversee North Atlantic seal hunting.

The fishing agreement, effective July 15 of this year, called for an immediate end to Norwegian fishing operations within the 12-mile territorial limit off Canada's East Coast, and a phasing out of fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence by 1974.

Fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence would be limited to a maximum of 20 vessels operating between Aug. 15 and Dec. 15 each year until 1974. These vessels would only be allowed to fish for cod and would not be allowed to fish within the 12-mile territorial limit.

No Aid for Metis

EDMONTON (CP) — Gloria Frerichs of the Metis Association of Alberta said Thursday her head is getting "numb from beating it against brick walls."

Indians and whites in the depressed Slave Lake area have been successful in getting government approval for development proposals, she said. But not so the Metis.

Mrs. Frerichs, one of the few white employees of the Metis Association and its economic development director, and two Metis in her department prepared a proposal last April on a logging operation in the Slave Lake area, 150 miles north of Edmonton. A proposal which has not yet been accepted or rejected.

Welfare Hike Held

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council tabled for three weeks provincial welfare director Walter Boyd's proposals to increase welfare payments. Boyd's proposal would increase the city's annual welfare bill by $662,000 by attempting to link welfare payments to the cost of living.

Judgment In Tax Case By Year-End

Judgment is expected by the end of the year in the latest legal joust over the long tax-evasion battle between the Crown and businessman David Hummel.

Arguments in the case by prosecutor Robert Hutchison and defence lawyer John Spencer were heard in chambers Thursday by Mr. Justice R. A. Wootton. Spencer is objecting to Crown procedure in appealing a dismissal of the charges against Hummel.

The charges were dismissed after a trial last spring in provincial court.

Hummel, himself a lawyer, had been charged with evading taxes on income of $128,000 and making false or deceptive tax returns. Judge E. F. N Robinson dismissed the five counts, saying he could find no evidence of guilty intent on Hummel's part. The Crown then launched an appeal.

Thursday, Spencer said Hummel had not been given notice of the appeal within the 15-day time limit called for by the Criminal Code.

Hutchison said it had been impossible to locate Hummel within the 15-day period after the Robinson judgment, and that under the law an appeal could proceed without notifying Hummel if he could not be found.

Spencer said the Crown should have known Hummel was in Mexico, and asked immediate dismissal of the appeal.

Rabbits Spreading North

Cottontail rabbits have been sighted in the Nanaimo area and are continuing to spread north along Vancouver Island's east coast, the provincial fish and wildlife branch reported today.

The rabbits appear to be moving north quickly after first appearing in the Sooke area in the late 1960s. On Nov. 15 the branch reported the rabbits had crossed the Malahat, paving the way for Northward migration.

The branch's full report for November states:

"Previous to this year they had been confined south of the Malahat, but now it appears likely that they will spread up the east coast of the Island unhindered."

Look out, Campbell River.

Ski Park Road Opens

Mount Seymour Provincial Park in North Vancouver will reopen Saturday after being closed five months for road repairs and improvements, Recreation and Conservation Minister Ken Kiernan announced today.

Parking lot capacity has been increased to 1,200 cars from 1,000. All park ski slopes have been groomed and improved, and electric lifts will be in operation, Kiernan said.

Snowmobiles, toboggans and ski-bobs are not permitted in the park. Ski information can be obtained in Vancouver at 929-2358.

BURNED GIRL 'FAIR'

A 13-year-old Sooke girl is in fair condition at St. Joseph's Hospital with grease burns suffered in a cooking accident Thursday.

Tera Redlick of West Coast Road was making doughnuts in her home about 8 p.m. when the grease caught fire.

Sooke volunteer fire department, which took Miss Redlick to hospital, said the girl tried to remove the grease pot from the stove when grease spattered over her.

SWISH, SWISH JUDGES RIP THROUGH 765

CINCINNATI (UPI) — In less than three hours, judges cleared away a record 1,200 traffic cases in one day, getting rid of a blacklog of traffic citations dating back to 1969.

For an unexplained reason, police scheduled all 765 extra cases in court on Tuesday, instead of spacing them out over the week.

One judge attributed the overload to a "feud" in the police department.

Despite the record number of cases, three judges started to work at 9 a.m. and called the last case before noon.

Fire Death Inquiry

Coroner Edmond St. Jorre said Thursday he will hold an inquiry into the death of a 55-year-old Esquimalt woman who died in a fire at her home early Thursday.

Mrs. Kathleen Anne Back, 1208 Rockcrest, was found dead in the basement rumpus room. Her husband, Donald, and 17-year-old daughter, Linda, escaped unhurt.

Fire officials estimate damage to the home at $4,000. The alarm was received at 3:30 a.m.

Scout Meet On Saturday

Scouts and cubs in the Victoria area will stage their final centennial event of the year Saturday when they compete in a regional swimming meet that will involve about 200 boys from eight to 14 years.

Competition at the new Crystal Pool starts with heats at 5 p.m. and the last of eight finals is expected to conclude by 9. Bob Muir will present a display of "drown proofing" during the program.

No admission will be charged for the meet, at which a trophy will be awarded to the district scoring the highest number of points.

Glenda Jackson as the Princess Elizabeth

Glenda Jackson Acting A Staggering Experience

Oscar-winning British actress Glenda Jackson is at the peak of her profession, acclaimed on the international scene as one of the most talented and electrifying personalities in films today.

An intimate profile of this gifted and intelligent artist will be seen on CBC-TV's Telescope, Dec. 7 at 9:30 p.m. in color. It's an in-depth look at the woman who has played a variety of roles in films such as Women In Love, The Music Lovers and Sunday Bloody Sunday, as well as the part of Queen Elizabeth I in the BBC series Elizabeth R beginning Dec. 5 on CBC television.

Telescope shows Glenda at home with her husband Roy Hodges (an art dealer in Greenwich, England) and two-year-old son, follows her to the Venice Film Festival, and watches her performing on the set of her latest film Sunday Bloody Sunday. Viewers will hear from Glenda and her husband as well as the film's director, Academy Award-winning John Schlesinger, and also see film clips from all her movies.

Schlesinger refers to Glenda as "an intelligent and extremely adaptable actress" who while "unremarkable, or even plain off the screen" is capable of "generating a love affair with the camera", to create any expression or emotion she desires when performing.

A "basic and realistic" person, Glenda is the mother of a two-year-old boy who does her shopping in the local market like any other middle class British housewife. Viewers will see how this calm, ordinary looking woman can be transformed on a film set into a writhing nymphomaniac (The Music Lovers), a coldly sexual de-masculizing female (Women In Love) or the brittle, aristocratic queen in Elizabeth R.

Glenda herself admits to Telescope that she is never quite sure how much emotion she should release on camera and as viewers will see, when she begins to act it's a staggering experience. As Schlesinger sums up, "There's absolutely no phoniness about Glenda Jackson - she's not interested in nonsense." Acting is her profession and she is marvellously adept at it.

This edition of Telescope, entitled Queen Glenda, was directed in Europe by well known filmmaker Bob Barday. Film editor was Arla Saare and producer of the series is Sam Levene.

'Elizabeth R' Ousts Throne 'Pretender'

Legend gives rise to legend, even in television.

At the BBC in London during rehearsals for Elizabeth R (to be telecast in color on the CBC-TV network beginning Dec. 5 at 9:00 p.m.) the story is told of the queen and her throne. Glenda Jackson became so involved with her role as Queen Elizabeth I in the series that when a young actor tried to sit in the prop throne, Miss Jackson, in her best Elizabethan tones, ordered him out. No one ever tried to usurp Elizabeth I/Glenda Jackson's throne again.

Miss Jackson spent eight months studying, rehearsing and filming the series on the life of England's Virgin Queen.

As the daughter of Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn, Elizabeth was considered by some to have caused the English Reformation; in the belief that Anne Boleyn was about to bear him a son and heir, Henry broke with Rome and set up the Anglican Church with himself as head. When Elizabeth was born in 1533, a girl, not the hoped for male heir, Henry was dismayed. Elizabeth was to feel his displeasure for the rest of his life. Stepmothers came and went — in death or disgrace. These events made an impression on the young Elizabeth. Said Miss Jackson of Elizabeth's character: "When you are young these things go very deep. In my characterization, I had to find a person that could be cruel and ruthless, yet sentimental and even loving."

Elizabeth I, Queen of England from 1558 until her death in 1603, nearly 45 years later, ushered in another Golden Age in England's history.

During her reign, literature flourished: this was the age of Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queen, of Christopher Marlowe, Ben Jonson, Sir Philip Sidney and Shakespeare and the Queen's "progresses" or summer visits to noble castles which became festivals of the arts. It was the age of adventure, discovery and learning: Sir Walter Raleigh in America, statesman-scientist Sir Francis Bacon, Sir Francis Drake and The Golden Hind, advances in knowledge at the universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

Elizabeth was a Tudor to the core. She was intelligent, vain, red-haired — with a fiery temper to match it, an accomplished horsewoman, hunter, falconer, cardplayer and linguist (she wrote in English, French, Latin, Greek and Italian). She was a moderate in politics who did not wish to repeat the confusion and bloodshed of her brother's and sister's reigns.

Glenda Jackson notes: "As she grew older she did not simply become slower and more cantankerous. The change was far less obvious because she was always changing, from the very beginning. She was like a chameleon, altering to suit the circumstances and the people she was with. She couldn't afford to betray herself because she was an absolute monarch with power and authority of a sort that not even dictators possess today. And yet at the same time she capitalized on being a weak and feeble woman, so that the sentiments surrounding her apparent vulnerability helped to increase her power still further."

MEN IN HER LIFE — Actors playing leading roles in Elizabeth R, to be telecast Sundays at 9:30 p.m. on CBC-TV beginning Dec. 5 include: (top left, clockwise:) Robert Hardy as Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester; Ronald Hines as William Cecil; Stephen Murray as Francis Walsingham; and Robin Ellis as the Earl of Essex.

Catholics Protest Van Dyke Show

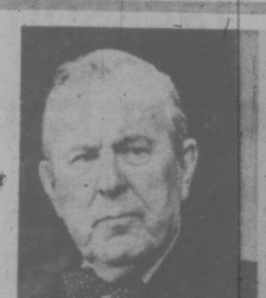
CLEVELAND (UPI) — The Cleveland Catholic Diocese has protested an episode of The New Dick Van Dyke Show which dealt with a priest and a nun stranded by a flash flood while on their way to be married.

Members of the diocese were urged to write the Columbia Broadcasting System and the show's sponsors and protest the episode, televised Nov. 13.

"We found this show to be distasteful, contrived and insulting," the Rev. Joseph Kraker, assistant chancellor of the diocese, said.

"Perhaps we are a bit touchy in this area, but judging from the calls we have received there are a number of people as touchy as ourselves," Kraker said.

Kraker, who is also director of the diocese's department of radio and television and hosts a diocesan radio program, said he would give his radio listeners a list of all the sponsors.



THE TUMULTUOUS Diefenbaker-Pearson era — 1957-67 is vividly re-created in The Tenth Decade, a CBC series of one-hour documentaries telecast Wednesdays at 9 p.m. Television reviewers across the country have used up most of the superlatives to describe this outstanding historical series. The program features archival film footage and new interviews with leading personalities of the period, including the two principal protagonists, Lester Pearson and John Diefenbaker.

Long-Time Dispute Closer to Solution

WASHINGTON (AP) — An end to a six-year dispute that has halted cable television expansion into most of the major cities in the United States has come a step closer with the broadcasting industry's acceptance of a compromise proposal.

The National Association of Broadcasters announced that its directors agreed to accept the compromise plan presented last week by the office of telecommunications policy, a White House agency.

The National Cable Television Association, which has been at odds with broadcasters over expansion of cable TV, has announced its directors voted to accept the compromise in principle.

The Committee of Copyright Owners, representing persons who hold rights to movies and series seen on television, also must agree to the compromise before the Federal Communications Commission can put the plan into effect.

Under the compromise, cable TV firms in the 100 largest cities could furnish viewers with two out-of-town stations.

Vienna Scene of Beethoven Show

One of the world's greatest conductors conducts the music of one of the world's greatest composers on a 90-minute special to be telecast in color on CBC-TV Dec. 5 at 7:30 p.m.

The program, Beethoven's Birthday: A Celebration in Vienna with Leonard Bernstein, was filmed in Vienna to mark the 200th anniversary of the birth of Ludwig van Beethoven last year.

Leonard Bernstein conducts the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, the Vienna State Opera Chorus and soloists in performances of three Beethoven works. Bernstein also narrates as the camera shows viewers parts of the city Beethoven loved and where he spent most of his working years.

Ludwig van Beethoven was born Dec. 16, 1770, at 20 Bonngasse in the Rhine city of Bonn, Germany. He moved to Vienna permanently in 1792 study and compose. A moody, sensitive man, disappointed in love and sometimes disappointed in life, Beethoven's troubles increased as he became deaf; by 1818 all communication with him was on paper. On March 26, 1827, a terrible thunderstorm hit Vienna and on that night one of music's great revels died. All Vienna mourned his passing.

Three Beethoven compositions will be performed: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major portions of Fidelio and Symphony No. 9 in D Minr.

Piano Concerto No. 1 in C major was taped at the Musikverein with Bernstein himself as soloist. The composition was written when Beethoven was still in his early 20s.

Rehearsals of; and excerpts from, Fidelio were filmed at the Theatre-an-der-Wien ducted the original premiere where Beethoven himself conof his opera in 1805. The principal roles are sung by Gwyneth Jones, James King, Theo Adam and Franz Crass.

The program concludes with the fourth and final movement of the Ninth Symphony taped at the Konzerthaus. Gwyneth Jones, Shirley Verett, Placido Domingo and Martti Talvela are soloists in the choral finale for which Beethoven used a collaboration of voices and orchestra in setting to music Schiller's Ode to Joy.

TV Exec Hits Political Spots

SAN. FRANCISCO (UPI) — An advertising executive has suggested a five-minute minimum length on political messages for radio and television because short "spots" are "inadequate and inappropriate" in presenting a candidate.

"I'm urging all of us in the advertising business not to be beguiled into making commercials that confuse a candidate and an office with a deodorant and an armpit," said John E. O'Toole, president of Foote, Cone and Belding Communications, Inc.

O'Toole told the San Francisco Advertising Club that a broadcast code should be established whereby political messages would tackle major issues and the candidates' stands on those issues.

He said 10 to 60 second political messages "defy a discussion of the issues and encourage the shallowest kind of imagery, the shoddiest kind of logic and the most reprehensible kind of mudslinging."

O'Toole said "image-builders" couldn't skirt the issues or use "groovy music and up-shots of a grinning candidate" if a full five minutes were required.

He then showed a film of that length that his firm made on behalf of Sen. George S. McGovern, (D-South Dakota), and offered to produce at cost a message for any other announced presidential candidate of either major party.

Percy Gets Contract

TORONTO (CP) — Relations have turned fair and warmer between the CBC and Percy Saltzman, the chalk-flipping weatherman.

The network announced Sunday it has agreed on a one-year contract with Saltzman which will entitle him to do additional work on the CBC's Weekday program besides his regular forecasts.

Saltzman, who has been on the air continuously since the debut of CBC television, was to have left the network a week ago in a disagreement over a new contract.

10th Decade May Go To Schools

OTTAWA (CP) — Talks are going on with the CBC for the possible distribution to schools of the film series The Tenth Decade. But State Secretary Gerard Pelletier said Monday "many problems" are involved.

Norman Cafik (L-Ontario) suggested in the Commons that the series, depicting the Diefenbaker-Pearson years, be distributed to schools because of its historic value.

Country Music Goin' Uppity

By ALLEN MUSE

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Country music is going back to the country — and it's going in style.

On a tight loop of the Cumberland River east of Nashville, 370 acres of pasture and woodland is being transformed into Opryland, U.S.A., which promoters call "The Home of American Music."

In addition to housing the Friday and Saturday night performances of the Grand Ole Opry, the Opryland complex will offer flashes of American music history — country, folk, gospel, western and rock.

It will be the seventh home for the Grand Ole Opry radio show, the longest continuously broadcast program in radio history.

"No effort is being wasted to give this area a warm, homespun appearance," said John Kretschmer, an Opryland official.

"It's not going to be just a bunch of rides, although there is an amusement park aspect to it."

He outlined five distinctly American areas of music and said each is being developed in a themed portion of the park, which will include rides, live musical performances and capsule histories of the music.

"For instance," Kretschmer said, "there'll be a riverside area, showing how jazz, rhythm and blues fits into the music picture of America.

"Then there's a western area where the old ballads and the influence of the Spanish guitar on America's music is shown.

"The idea is to give a cultural understanding of our music, while having a good time."

Other areas will portray folk music from the Appalachian Mountains and hills, traditional country music and the rock and pop music of today.

Nothing is to be animated, tinselled or covered with glitter.

"American music is as real as the blisters on a man's hand behind a plow," said Mike Downs, general manager of Opryland.

The wild animals will be live, and bricks, cedar shingles and whitewash are being used generously on all the buildings that are taking shape.

The park's security force will be old-time sheriffs, wearing 10-gallon hats and riding horses.

A display of wild animals native to the Tennessee woodlands will run free in an "Animal Ravine" designed by Jim Fowler of television's Wild Kingdom.

The setting will be as natural as possible, he said.

"The people will be in the cages instead of the animals."

Even the merry-go-round is no typical, carnival model.

It was made in Germany more than 90 years ago and is being carefully rebuilt, with fresh paint on its wood-carved figures. Its companion piece is a huge Bavarian pipe organ, which can outplay a 70-piece orchestra.

"In many ways," Downs went on, "country music is a miniature reflection of all American music. Country music is the living ancestor of early folk music brought to this country by the Pilgrims and those that came after them.

"And as the early music of our land, country music further spawned other forms of music, such as blues, jazz, rock and pop."

Plans were laid for Opryland when officials of WSM, Inc. met to decide where to relocate the Opry broadcasts.

The present home of the show, which plays live to 450,000 visitors a year, is the Grand Ole Opry House in downtown Nashville.

The old brick structure, built 82 years ago, used to be a church called the Gospel Union Tabernacle.

WSM moved the Opry there in 1941. Previous homes for the show have included a public auditorium and a sawdust-floored east Nashville church.

The first broadcasts originated in WSM's studios in 1925.

But age, lack of air conditioning and stern, hard wooden church pews for seats don't seem to be as popular with today's country music fans as they were for Grandpa and Grandma.

Urban renewal is also threatening the Opry House.

So the main feature of Opryland, opening next April 29, will be a 4,500-seat auditorium, especially built for radio and television broadcasts. It will be the largest television studio in the country.

"Our whole concept in building Opryland," said Downs, "is to create a facility that will be a showcase of American music that people can point to with pride and say — 'I'm proud to be an American, and this is my music'."

And what of the present Opry House?

When they tear it down, the materials will be used to construct a chapel at the new site, "The Little Church of Opryland."

Taping Plan Pending

OTTAWA (CP) — Northern Television Systems Ltd., owner of a cable television system in Whitehorse, Y.T., has been given permission to tape programs from three Seattle, Wash., television stations for delayed rebroadcasting on its system, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission said last week.

The commission said it would be up to Northern Television to reach agreements with the stations to obtain the programs.

Julie Andrews Baffled by Fickle Public

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Julie Andrews served a traditional cup of tea at precisely the correct hour in her Beverly Hills mansion.

The setting, the children, the garden in autumn and the hostess might have adorned a Saturday Evening Post cover.

But as Mrs. Blake Edwards, wife of a successful movie director, Julie is very much a with-it girl who attempted to describe her antics with her close pal Carol Burnett on their forthcoming television special.

Ten years ago the girls got together for Julie and Carol at Carnegie Hall. It was a bell-ringer.

On Dec. 7 it will be Julie and Carol at Lincoln Centre, marking the first time Julie has worked in some two years. Her last outing was Darling Lili almost two years ago.

"It's a shame to call this work, actually," Julie said. "For Carol and me it is an hour of fun, a mass of energy and affection between the two of us."

Carol says Julie brings out the class in her while Carol brings to the fore all that is tacky in Julie.

It is Carol's sense of humor. Both women are thoroughbreds.

Carol may be seen weekly in her own CBS television show. But one of Hollywood's great mysteries is Julie, the girl with the magical singing voice, flawless in Mary Poppins, millions more for Universal in Thoroughly Modern Millie, and the greatest box office hit of all time in Sound of Music for 20th-Century-Fox.

No three pictures by any actress have earned so much money nor won such public adoration.

But suddenly, without warning, critics and then the public turned on the English-born beauty. Her last two films, Star and Darling Lili were disappointments.

Julie is in better voice than ever and, if possible, more beautiful and talented. The fickle turn of movie-goers is a subject Julie does not discuss. But clearly she is confused and hurt by the unaccountable about-face of press and public alike.

Julie Andrews is hardly the sort of actress a producer would cast wearing blue jeans, doing nude scenes or playing a trampy dame bouncing from one bed to another.

There is an aristocratic, fragile and sophisticated essence to Julie reminiscent of Grace Kelly — only more so.

"Blake and I are planning to do a contemporary picture together," Julie said. "I'd rather not discuss the plot or the title because it isn't solidly set.

"I'm not in overwhelming demand at the moment. Perhaps because of the sort of pictures they are making now.

"Then again I'm married and have children. This forces me to be more selective. If I were offered a picture in some far off location I wouldn't be able to pack up and leave. Nor would I care to."

Julie hasn't been idle the past two years. She recently completed a book titled Mandy, aimed at young girls.

She has been thinking, too. "All of my eight movies have been period pictures," she concluded. "Perhaps the next one should be modern."

Actor Sues Honda For $25 Million

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Brian Kelly, who was seriously injured in a motorcycle accident a year ago, has brought a $25-million lawsuit against American Honda Motor Co. Inc. and a dealer, Menlo Cyclery.

Kelly, star of the Flipper Television series, said in a Superior Court suit filed Friday that the Honda motorcycle he was riding malfunctioned, causing the accident.

Kelly suffered head injuries from which he is still recovering, and was in hospital for several weeks, said the actor's lawyer, Joseph Giovanazzi.

At the time of the accident, Kelly had begun work as the male lead in the movie The Love Machine. He said because of his injuries, Columbia Pictures and Frankovich Productions replaced him with another actor. A friend who was riding with Kelly was thrown off but not injured.

How James Caan Fulfilled a Fantasy

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Actors live in a fantasy world, portraying persons close or distant from themselves, working at being someone else.

Sometimes it's a burdensome job. Occasionally it is exciting.

Once in a great while playing a particular role is a thrill.

Actor James Caan fulfilled a childhood fantasy by donning the pads and uniform of the Chicago Bears professional football team and actually scrimmaging with the behemoths of the Windy City.

Caan was playing Brian Piccolo, the half-back who died of cancer last year, in Brian's Song — a two-hour ABC movie broadcast Nov. 30.

Like an excited child Caan recounted his adventures among the monsters of the midway last summer during training when the football sequences of the show were filmed.

At 160 pounds and 31 years of age, Caan hardly represents a pro running back.

But he played a little football at Michigan State, is in top physical condition and is as starry-eyed as a 10-year-old about the beefy gladiators of the gridiron.

"It was great," he exclaimed the other day.

"Those big guys accepted me — an actor — but they also levelled me during the action scenes. I'd go out for a flat screen pass, and they'd zap me like they would anyone else.

"In a couple of scenes I had to hit off tackle and pow! Jimmy Gunn hit me like a coiled bulldozer.

"But I was around them long enough and wearing Brian Piccolo's No. 41 so that some of them actually began to call me 'Pick.' I've never worked on anything like this before."

The story is a true one of Piccolo's friendship with super star Gale Sayers (played by Billy Dee Williams).

Learned Actor

Peter Falk, star of the television Columbo movies, has a master's degree in public administration.

Rabbi to Famous Studies People

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Rabbi Max Nussbaum thumbs through Variety occasionally, watches TV and movies to spot members of his congregation and has been the counsellor involved in conversions of several celebrities to Judaism.

The white-haired scholarly Nussbaum is rabbi to many members of the movie set.

Many Jewish entertainers and movie executives go to him when they're considering divorce or marriage.

"Sometimes I'm even called in to counsel non-Jews in the industry with marital troubles," he says.

He has guided some of the most publicized conversions of Christian entertainers to Judaism. Elizabeth Taylor, Sammy Davis Jr., Davis's former wife, Mai Britt, and most recently actress Martha Hyer have become Jews after study with Nussbaum.

Nussbaum, head of Temple Israel of Hollywood, an unpretentious edifice on Hollywood Boulevard a few blocks from Grauman's Chinese Theatre, claims it's the religion—not he—that attracts celebrities. But others say that's not the whole story.

"He attracts people in the industry because he understands the fallibility of people," says Lester Ziffren, president of the congregation and lawyer for movie figures.

The temple is affiliated with the reform branch of Judaism, a more liberal wing than the orthodox or conservative branches.

Reform Judaism eliminates such traditional accoutrements as skullcaps and prayer shawls; the services are briefer and mostly in English.

The today-oriented philosophy often attracts converts, says Nussbaum. However, conversions to Judaism are still few— about 2,000 a year in the United States.

"We do not go after converts," says Nussbaum. 'The Jewish religion does not allow such missionary work. But when someone comes to us and we find that it is sincere, our doors are open."

A key catalyst to conversion, though, remains marriage. "It keeps peace in the family," says one Hollywood executive who has seen many such conversions at the temple.

Sandy Duncan Released From Hospital

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Sandy Duncan, 25, star of the television series Funny Face, was released from the UCLA Medical centre last Sunday, two weeks after undergoing surgery to remove a benign tumor from behind her left eye.

She is expected to spend about two weeks recuperating at home.

Phyllis Diller Gets New Look

DALLAS (UPI) — Phyllis Diller, who usually looks like a sequined peacock on the rampage in her comedy act, is becoming a new woman.

SHRILL LAUGH

For the past year and a half, she has been wearing retainers on her teeth, has switched to the new "soft" contact lenses and goes to the "fat doctor" once a week. To top it all off, she's getting a face lift in December.

"It's re-cycling," she explained with the shrill laugh that has made her a madcap queen of comedy for 16 years.

She explained that it's both a beauty and health measure, "so I can breathe and so my teeth won't fall off my jaw from mal-occlusion."

"I've got to get rid of these bags under my eyes, they make me look tired and I'm not tired," she said. She dug into her second helping at the Fairmont Hotel's buffet line, where she entertained her audience with lines such as "my life is like the sixth day of a five-day deodorant pad — it stinks."

COLORFUL GARB

Actually she says she is "gloriously in love" with her second husband, Warde Donovan, a handsome singer and broadway actor. They have seven children from first marriages; Phyllis has five, ages 21 to 31, and he has two, ages 18 and 23.

"She and Donovan definitely presented a colorful picture at the hotel., she in a multi-colored harlequin robe "made up from re-cycled old costumes" and a triangular feather hat. He had on a patterned coat with a print shirt and silk scarf-tie, all in various shades of pink and brown.

"When I get through with my re-vamp I should be thin, adorable, my nose will be straighter and I can breathe out of both sides instead of one . . .

Falk's Glass Eye Gets Workout

HOLLYWOOD — Peter Falk's right eye was removed surgically because of a malignancy when he was 3 years old. And throughout his childhood he was sensitive about it.

"But I got over my sensitivity all at once when I was a teen-ager. I was playing in a softball game in the town where I grew up, Ossining, N.Y. The umpire called me out on a slide at third.

"I was safe a mile, and I was so outraged I picked out my glass eye and handed it to him, there in front of everyone. Since then, I've never been sensitive about it," he said.

The eye never has been a problem for him in his career as an actor, except in a curious way. Occasionally, if he spends too many continuous hours under the hot stage lights, his overworked left eye will become irritated to the point viewers can see a difference and inevitably guess wrong on which one is glass.

And this year, Falk's eye is getting a genuine workout. In fact, it may be his best year yet as an actor.

RAVE REVIEWS

He's the star of what may well be a hit Broadway play and he's a part of the action on the only new television show of this season to make a major impact on the viewing audience, NBC's Mystery Movie, show in which his Columbo character is one of three rotating leads.

Falk knocked out eight of the 90-minute Columbo features this past summer then headed for New York and the starring role in Neil Simon's new play, Prisoner of Second Avenue. The play got rave reviews in its trial opening in New Haven.

And the movie, Husbands, in which he appeared with his two pals, John Cassavetes and Ben Gazzara, is still playing theatres around the nation.

In short, he's doing it all at once and succeeding.

And even more important, he loves the characters he's playing these days. They appeal to the fancy of Falk, who is a very fanciful fellow.

His TV character of Columbo is a low-pressure slob who ingratiates himself into crime solutions. "An ass-backwards Sherlock Holmes," Falk described him.

PECULIARITIES

In the new Simon play, his character is every middle-income man who ever tried to survive a marriage in Manhattan. "The guy has a nervous breakdown over the problems of living in Manhattan," Falk described him. It's a tribute to Simon's genius that the comedy springs from this tragedy.

Somehow these characters fit with Falk himself, who has peculiarities.

For instance, the color brown. "Personally, I like brown. So all I own is brown," he explained. He was wearing a brown sport shirt, slacks, sox and shoes, looking somewhat like a rumpled deliveryman home from work.

And pool. He's an expert pool player. "But I gave up shooting pool because I like it so much. I could spend the whole night playing, then the next day I'd ask myself, 'What did I do?' So I gave it up," he said.

And privacy. "It really bugs Cassavetes. I've known him four years and never invited him to the house. So what would we do? Sit? I'd rather meet him on a street.

"I don't go to parties. And if we have to go to somebody's house, all the way there I'm already thinking I'm on my way home. I'd rather hit golf balls or go to a movie," he said.

SPRITE WIFE

And kids. "I like to spend a little time with my 5-year-old, but not too much. I got to watch it or I'll become a playmate," he said.

Even though Falk has been a resident of Beverly Hills for the past 10 years, he's still considered a New Yorker.

"My nationality is Jewish and my father still has a dry goods store in Ossining," he said. "My mother goes crazy when I say that. She says, 'Call it a department store.' But it's still a dry goods store.

He met his wife, designer Alice Mayo, when he was a drama student at Syracuse University.

"She was painting scenery and they called her in as a substitute sprite in The Tempest when one of the girls fell ill. Jerry Leiter — he's now head of TV at Warner Brothers — played the king and wore a big beard.

"When she danced by me, I said, 'Give you two bits to pull the king's beard.' When she came by again, she said, 'Up yours.'

"Those were her first words to me and it was love at first sight," Falk said, smiling.

'Unique' Station Set for Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — This city's fourth television station — a commercial, low-budget, locally-oriented ultra-high frequency outlet — will go on the air next September following approval of its licence last week by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission in Ottawa.

The new station, on Channel 79, will be managed by Moses Znaimer, a former CBC public affairs interviewer. The application for the licence, made at a Toronto CRT hearing last September, was described by the federal authority as "uniquely different."

The concept is financed by 25 investors, all holding minority positions. The idea was conceived by Phyllis Switzer of Toronto, who will be the station's vice-president.

The station has $2.8 million in financing pledged. Znaimer said he expects the station will cost about $850,000 to build and $700,000 to operate during the first year.

"We have money to go for three years without taking in a cent of advertising, so we'll be free of the usual panic to get the big ratings and to pull in the big advertisers right away," he said.

The key to the "uniquely different" station is that it will abandon the usual mass-appeal approach to commercial TV, though the backers admit it may need time to catch on with viewers.

"Most stations cover 100 miles, cost millions to operate and have to appeal to almost everybody in range to attract enough advertising money to cover their costs," said Znaimer.

"We'll cover only Metro, will talk only about Metro in our own programs — which will fill at least 60 per cent of the time up to midnight — and will keep our operation small.

"Our costs will be low so our advertising rates will be low. We'll be able to attract a whole range of local merchants who never could afford TV time on the big stations."

Znaimer said a 2½-hour block of information programming will be the heart of Channel 79's evening schedule, with heavy emphasis also on local sports and weekend time reserved for ethnic programming.

Blonde Reporter Back

Michele Ray, a tall French blonde who began her professional life as a fashion model, has only one ambition: "To get a good story."

At least three times in her career as a newswoman she's gotten the big story — and each time she was directly involved in the events, twice by being kidnapped and once by driving the entire length of the American continent.

Miss Ray, 32, is the wife of film director Costa Gavras who made Z and The Confession.

The daughter of a middle-class couple in Nice, she was first married at the age of 16.

The marriage broke up soon after the birth of a son, Patrick, and Michele moved to Paris. Under the professional name of "Moune" she quickly graduated into the top level of fashion modeling — working for Chanel and Christian Dior.

In 1966 she went into journalism. With three companions she drove from Alaska to Tierra Del Fuego, an exploit which caught the imagination of the French press.

The following year she went to South Vietnam, for a French news magazine. She set out to drive alone from Camau, in the Southernmost province of South Vietnam to the Demilitarized Zone in the north.

In Binh Dinh province she stopped to repair a flat tire — and was captured by a Viet Cong unit which took her off into the jungle. Michele was missing for 21 days and given up for lost.

She was released unharmed by the Viet Cong in an area where the U.S. army was operating. She hitch-hiked her way to the nearest city in a military convoy.

This time she was on assignment for a French television and radio network to go to Montevideo to report on the Uruguayan elections. She disappeared Monday and was believed kidnapped by a guerrilla group. She returned home again Tuesday, denying there had been a kidnapping.

Keystone Kop Dies at 84

SOUTH PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Hank Mann, 84, believed to be the last survivor of Mack Sennett's original Keystone Kops, has died. Entering motion pictures in 1912, Mann played one of the bumbling, bowler-hatted policemen in numerous movies and made occasional character actor appearances as late as 1960.

Occult Attracts New Believers

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — America's preoccupation with diabolism and the occult has reached epidemic proportions, making fortunes for film makers and writers smart enough to capitalize on it.

Rosemary's Baby apparently set the trend.

Author William Blatty's The Exorcist has enflamed old adherents and made believers of uncounted others.

Blatty is now putting the finishing touches to the screenplay of his book which has sold 150,000 copies in hard cover, was No. 1 on the best-seller list for 17 weeks and is in its 8th printing.

The bizarre story involves a demon who takes possession of an eight-year-old girl.

PLAUSIBLE

Even more bizarre still is the country's reaction to the book.

"People believe in diabolical possession," said Blatty, "and so do I. My book strips away connotations of the Dark Ages and superstition. It deals with a bodyless intelligence. Demonism is the most plausible explanation of bodily possession in 10 per cent of the cases which defy scientific analysis."

Blatty is a dark visaged man with pale, eerie blue eyes and a pointed beard. He is the most pleasant of men. But he does give the appearance of the prince of darkness.

A Roman Catholic, Blatty's story deals with priests exorcising the demon from the body of the little girl.

"Exorcism still is an accepted part of the church," Blatty said, "and my book was praised by Vatican publications.

"But the exciting thing to me is that people are so terribly interested in the occult now. They are searching for a paranormal substantiation of the existence of the soul.

"Thus if my book smacks of something credible, readers want to believe it, even the greatest skeptics.

"To me it is a theological detective story. The mystery is simple: Is there a God? That's what causes readers to think and make them want to believe what I've written has some basis in fact."

WROTE SCREENPLAY

Something more concrete is Blatty's sale of his extraordinary book to Warner Bros. for $641,000.

Blatty insisted on writing the screenplay to prevent his story from being twisted into something quite different from what he wrote.

"There are phenomena that cannot be discounted by doctors or psychiatrists," Blatty said. "Carl Jung wrote about demonism, so did William James and Menninger became involved in it in 1947.

"You see, if a rational person can accept the possibility of the existence of demons, then it is possible to believe in the soul and the spirit."

The spirit world, hell, the devil, heaven, limbo and all the rest come in for consideration if one accepts the ground rules.

Jacqueline Bissett Does Battle for Women's Lib

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Jacqueline Bissett is a wretched proponent of women's lib.

She is so stunningly beautiful, so obviously liberated and insultingly intelligent no man worth his salt would dare claim superiority to this British charmer who is best remembered as the stewardess in Airport.

She is starring in a new film in which her first line is: "Thought the women's lib movement consisted of seven women with hairy legs who had a genius for getting on the Johnny Carson Show."

Until recently that sentiment was shared by Jacqueline, whose gray-green eyes penetrate a man with the force of lasers.

But as the leading lady of Stand Up and Be Counted, a comedy on women's lib, Jacqueline has been taken in by the movement and has become involved.

Aux barricades!

Pity, too. Jacqueline was born to be adored, not debated.

"I think this movement is more than a phase," said Jackie hesitantly. She's still pretty new at all this ruckus.

"This is a social force with great impact. But women aren't going to have everything their way by screaming and parading. That won't do it at all."

And what credentials, pray, does Miss Bisset possess regarding downtrodden womanhood — she with the passport of beauty?

"My credentials are as good as any women's," she said. "After all I am female.

"And I suppose I am pretty. But that doesn't last forever. You must think about fading beauty. And it must be devastating to be ugly. Physical appearance is secondary. I've met ugly women and found them absolutely super because they are exciting and intelligent.

"I'm learning. I thought it would be easy to play my role as a newspaper woman who knew nothing about women's lib because I knew very little about it. Then I discovered I was on the other side."
